SPECIAL ISSUE | 2011-2012 PRESIDENT'S REPORT

SMART MONEY

Taking up the Portfolio Challenge

The View from the President's Office

By Todd S. Hutton

“The stories in this issue highlight the transformative power of Utica College and strengthen the legacy of learning to which we have dedicated ourselves since our founding.”

With this President's Report we offer our thanks to the many dedicated Pioneers – individuals and families, alumni and friends, neighbors and partners – who have lent their support to the mission of Utica College over this past year.

I can think of no better way to celebrate their generosity than through the stories you will find in this issue. Each represents a facet of the Pioneer spirit that is intensely individual but also exemplary of the values we all share; those of personal accomplishment, professional integrity, and abiding concern for the common good. Just as importantly, each is testament to what can be achieved when we invest in human potential.

Of particular interest is a very special Chiaroscuro photo essay by UC photographer Larry Pacilio chronicling the time he spent this fall with our football team. As is so often the case, images can greatly transcend the power of words, and these stirring slices of the student athlete experience, so expertly captured, are certainly no exception.

We are also invited to witness the remarkable intellectual capital that resides at the core of this institution through the reflections of both faculty and members of our Board of Trustees. Thoughtful, frank, and deeply illuminating, these conversations and meditations engage with some of the most pressing issues facing higher education today, demonstrating the degree to which visionary governance and inspired, effective teaching are really two sides of the same coin at UC.

Whether the focus is on an innovative student investment initiative or the extraordinary career of a prominent alumnus, the stories in this issue and many others like them highlight the transformative power of Utica College and strengthen the legacy of learning to which we have dedicated ourselves since our founding. When we express our appreciation to those who have supported the College, we are recognizing them for the central role they play in making these stories possible.

An investment in the project of higher education always realizes a substantial return – one that benefits deserving students and, crucially, society as a whole. Thank you for choosing to take part in this worthy effort.

Paying It Forward.

Reed Crawford '52 probably celebrates April 15th more cheerfully than most accounting alumni. In addition to tax day, it also happens to be his birthday.

His success, however, is no coincidence. Reed applied himself during his time on UC's Oneida Square campus, graduating cum laude in 3-1/2 years. "My parents worked hard putting me through college and I just felt I owed them something, so I really busted my hump studying," he recalls.

A Korean war veteran and a retired information systems specialist for Hoffman La Roche pharmaceuticals, Reed now lives in Charlotte, NC with his wife Kitty. And though he left UC sixty years ago, he has never forgotten the positive experience he had there. That's why he supports the College and a new generation of UC students through membership in the Heritage Society.

"I readily tell people I'm from Utica College, and I'm extremely proud and impressed by what it has become, so I just want to help support it. UC gave me what I needed, and I appreciate it very much," he says.

Way to give.

New Accelerated Second Degree Nursing Program

Utica College has taken another step in addressing the national nursing shortage. In January 2013, the College will enroll its first class of accelerated second-degree nursing students.

The new hybrid online program is designed for future nursing professionals who have already earned a baccalaureate degree in a discipline other than nursing. The intensive full-time, 16-month format, modeled after successful programs at several highly regarded universities, will enable clinically-trained nurses to be introduced into the health care system in a shorter than normal period of time. The theory portion of the instruction will be delivered in an online format, while clinical instruction will be locally based at a new extension site in Syracuse, NY.

The program represents a significant opportunity for UC to further its longstanding tradition of social responsiveness, expand the Nursing department's portfolio of undergraduate offerings, and greatly enhance the nursing program's already-strong reputation. Most importantly, it positions the College to even more aggressively meet the national nursing workforce crisis.

"We are excited about the opportunity to expand baccalaureate, pre-licensure nursing education to new populations of students, and particularly those who are dedicated and highly motivated to enter the nursing field. This is an issue to which we have been deeply committed for many years," says Catherine Brownell, chair and associate professor of nursing. "What we love about the potential of this specific delivery model is the opportunity we have to increase the nursing capacity within the same communities in which these students are rooted."

Since June, the program has generated nearly 3,000 inquiries from prospective students. The College is exploring opportunities to expand the program to additional locations sites.

Crist Receives Clark Distinguished Faculty Award

Thomas Crist, professor of physical therapy, is the 2012 recipient of the Harold T. Clark Jr. Distinguished Faculty Award. The award was presented to him by Provost and Vice President for Academic Affairs Judith Kirkpatrick during Utica College's August 26 Convocation ceremony.

The Clark Award was established and endowed by Harold T. Clark Jr. '65, the inaugural chair of the Utica College Board of Trustees, to recognize faculty scholarship, professional accomplishment, and potential for excellence.

Crist joined the UC faculty in 2001. Apart from his teaching, he has been actively engaged in his field of forensic anthropology, having presented numerous papers, reports, and workshops. He has earned a national and international reputation in scholarship – his work has twice been featured on the national television program Skeleton Stories – and he is the author of more than 100 professional publications and cultural resources reports. Crist has served as an expert witness and testified in hearings and criminal trials, has directed more than 20 historical cemetery excavations throughout the United States, and has been actively involved in DMORT, the disaster mortuary team that is mobilized in cases of mass fatalities. He is a co-founder of UC's Anthropological Field School held each summer in Albania, Greece, and Romania. Recently, he was elected fellow in the Academy of Forensic Sciences.

Raub Appointed VP for Financial Affairs

Tammara Raub has been appointed vice president for financial affairs and treasurer. She will have leadership responsibility for the strategic management of the College's financial assets and liabilities, including financial operations, budgetary planning and control, financial compliance and reporting, and endowment and debt management. Additionally, she will oversee the general accounting, purchasing, student financial services, and environmental health and conservation operations.

"I am very excited to be here, and very appreciative of the opportunity," Raub says. "What was so exciting to me while I was researching and pursuing this opportunity was that for a small university, there is so much big thinking and innovation at Utica College. That's rare, and to be part of that and to be a partner with faculty and staff in the exciting direction in which the College is going was very appealing."

Raub brings to this position extraordinary managerial and technical experience, including 23 years of accounting experience, the past 17 of which in higher education. She had served as controller at Alfred University, a position she has held since 2001. Previously, she was controller at St. Bonaventure University from 1995 to 2001 and senior accountant at Proto and Loskey CPAs from 1988 to 1995.

Raub, a CPA, holds a bachelor's degree from St. Bonaventure and is completing her MBA at Alfred.

Sonty Named VP for Technology/CIO

Vijay Sonty has been named vice president for technology and chief information officer. He will have responsibility for the leadership and management of the College's information technology strategies and operations.

Sonty brings to this position extraordinary creative insight and problem-solving ability as well as extensive technical and leadership skills and experience in the information technology field. He has worked in the education, corporate, and health care settings, and was most recently executive director of enterprise business systems and technology operations for Kaplan Inc.

He has previously served as chief information officer for Broward County (FL) Public Schools, the nation's sixth largest public school system, and senior vice president and chief technology officer for Foote Cone and Belding, a leading global advertising agency network.

He earned a bachelor's degree in chemistry from Osmania University in India and master's degrees in both environmental science and management information systems from Southern Illinois University.

New Community Foundation Zoology Lab

Utica College dedicated the Community Foundation of Herkimer and Oneida Counties Zoology Laboratory during an October 12 ceremony.

The new laboratory is part of the Gordon Science Center Capital Project, a major, multi-million dollar renovation of the 46-year-old teaching and research facility. The James and Katherine Pyne General Biology Laboratory and a new chemistry research laboratory were constructed in the summer of 2011.

These modern facilities represent a major step forward for an institution with a strong reputation for undergraduate research, particularly in the sciences.

UC President Todd S. Hutton says, "Gordon Science Center has been the locus of learning and discovery for generations of UC students. Thanks to the commitment and generosity of faithful supporters like the Community Foundation, we are now renewing its promise for generations to come. Together we are raising our science facilities to a level that's much closer to being on par with the extraordinary work already being done by our faculty and students.

"This zoology lab is designed for collaborative learning in the 21st century. It is, in every detail, a reflection of our continuing commitment to excellence in science education."

The laboratory was made possible in part by a discretionary grant from the Community Foundation combined with a grant from a donor advised fund of the foundation.

The foundation has had a long history of support for Utica College. Its philanthropy has funded endowed scholarships and awards, supported new construction and building renewal, advanced learning technology, and enhanced student experiences. As well, the foundation's support for the Young Scholars Liberty Partnerships Program has been crucial to that program's continued success.

"There is so much good that goes back and forth between our two organizations. When this grant request came to us, we celebrated the fact that (the College) elected to work with the Community Foundation," says Community Foundation President and CEO Peggy O'Shea. "We are thankful the College brought this opportunity to us to make this investment in science education. We are truly honored to be a part of this, and look forward to the wonderful things that will come from this lab in years to come."

Mazloom Atrium Dedicated During Homecoming

Utica College dedicated the Albert S. Mazloom Atrium on October 12 as part of Homecoming festivities.

The impressive entryway of the Economic Crime, Justice Studies, and Cybersecurity Building is both an architectural focal point and a hub for students, faculty, and visitors. The space recognizes its namesake's extraordinary record of professional and entrepreneurial achievement, philanthropy, and service.

Mazloom, a 1958 UC graduate, is president of Trenton Technology, a computer technology manufacturer that is a major employer in the Utica area. His leadership has earned a national profile for his company while enhancing the Mohawk Valley's reputation as a center of innovation.

He has given back to the College with his time, expertise, and financial support, his efforts having greatly enhanced the student experience and having helped grow the College's reputation as a center of innovation and excellence. He served three terms on the Board of Trustees and is an emeritus member of the Utica College Foundation Board. Further, he has participated at a leadership level in the Achieve comprehensive campaign and the Gordon Science Center Capital Project, has endowed two scholarships, and is a founding member of the President's Summit Circle.

"I don't look at giving to an institution like (Utica College) as philanthropy. It's an investment, and it's an obligation," Mazloom says. "The early founders gave their time and finances to create this institution, the institution that gave me the ability to enter into my profession. I feel very strongly that those of us who have the resources to do so are obligated to give back to a community that has been so generous to us."

Utica College Dedicates Connie Gaetano Plaza

Utica College dedicated the Connie Gaetano Plaza on September 15, recognizing the late philanthropist, humanitarian, and community leader.

The plaza provides a welcoming entry to Charles A.

Gaetano Stadium, which was dedicated in honor of Connie's husband in 2002. Now, fittingly, the couple's names share a place of prominence on the facade of this campus landmark

"(Gaetano Stadium) is one of the finest athletic stadiums of its kind in our region", says President Tood S. Hutton. "This facility would not be standing today were it not for the generosity of the Gaetano family, who helped build a lasting legacy for Utica College, for our athletic program, for the hundreds of student-athletes who benefit from this stadium and field, and for the thousands of fans who fill this stadium every week during the fall and spring months.

"However, for as much enjoyment as this stadium has brought so many over the past decade, it has, until now, stood unfinished."

Degan, Hislop, and Salsbury Join Board of Trustees

New members of the Utica College Board of Trustees began their terms earlier this year.

Frederick C. Degen '70 is of counsel to the law firm of Helmer, Johnson, Misiaszek and Kenealy in Utica. His areas of practice are real estate, estate planning, estate probate and administration, and not-for-profit and religious corporations. After graduating from Utica College with a degree in history, he earned his J.D. from Albany Law School. He was admitted to the New York State Bar in 1974, and he is also admitted to the U.S. District Court, Northern District of New York. He was an associate attorney with the New York State Office of the Attorney General for 30 years until his retirement in 2003. He is a trustee of the Leonardsville Cemetery Association, a past president and director of the Cedar Lake Club, and a member of the Oneida County Bar Association.

Andrew Hislop '84 is president and CEO of LECESSE Construction Services in West Henrietta, NY. He earned his bachelor's degree in construction management from Utica College and immediately joined DD&C Construction in Rochester as chief estimator. He joined LECESSE in 1989 as project manager, became a partner in 2001, and was named president in 2004. In 2007, he bought the business. Today the company operates in multiple states across the eastern United States and is among Rochester's Top 100 Companies, reaching as high as No. 5 in 2009. Hislop has served on a number of boards, including Catholic Charities Diocese of Rochester, Valley Manor, New York Association of General Contractors, and Rochester Downtown Development Corporation. He is a current co-chair for the American Heart Association and is past industry co-chair for the United Way of Rochester.

Mark Salsbury '79 recently retired as senior vice president from Dover Corporation's Product Identification Group. He now operates Salsbury Human Capital Management, a consulting business that specializes in helping organizations gain a competitive advantage by leveraging its human capital. He earned his bachelor's degree in political science from Utica College and a M.P.A. from the University at Albany. He was previously the worldwide human resources leader for Schlumberger Limited's high technology group of companies and vice president of human resources for Markem Corp., which was later acquired by Dover Corp.

New Scholarship Honors Kaczmarski

A $25,000 gift from John and Robbie Kaczmarski will fund an endowed scholarship in memory of their son, John Kaczmarski Jr. '11.

"Big" John, as the younger John was known, was a freshman criminal justice major and football player at UC when he passed away on February 10, 2008. In 2008, the Kaczmarski family hosted the Big John Kaczmarski Memorial Golf Outing, which has since become an annual golf tournament honoring John Jr.'s life and memory. The proceeds from the tournament previously endowed the Big John Kaczmarski Jr. Offensive Lineman of the Year Award.

John and Robbie, along with their daughter, Jessica Hills, and grandson, John Benjamin Wilson, presented the scholarship gift to UC President Todd S. Hutton, Director of Athletics Dave Fontaine, and head football coach Blaise Faggiano on prior to UC's October 13 homecoming football game against Frostburg State.

For information on the scholarship and golf tournament, visit golf4johnny.org.

WHAT DOES HOMECOMING MEAN TO YOU?

"Homecoming allows me to continue my relationship with students. Instead of losing touch with them after they graduate, I can see them for years afterward and develop real friendships."

- Professor Kim Landon '75

"Homecoming gives me a venue to pull old friends out of the woodwork and bring them back to the place where we all grew up together. After all the old dirt has been kicked up and forgotten names plugged back into the stories, things start to change. We end up talking about our careers, kids, and giving updates on people that have gone off the grid. Going back to the place where it all started and talking about how far we've come really puts the past 10 years into perspective for me."

- Eric Ozanam '00

"Homecoming is an opportunity for me to reconnect with old friends, bask in the nostalgia of the parties we threw in our Alumni Hall suite, and remember the foundation UC gave me in the career I have today."

- Brian Agnew '03

THE SPORTING LIFE

This fall, one in three freshmen arrived at UC with expectations of participating in intercollegiate athletics. For the nearly 600 student-athletes, or roughly 28 percent of the undergraduate body on campus, who compete on UC's 25 varsity sports, the experience poses unique rewards and demands.

UC student-athletes represent the College in stadiums and arenas throughout New York and the northeast – and, in some cases, have traveled to other countries. They compete for national team and individual honors, hone their talent and passion for their sport, develop deep bonds with teammates, and learn valuable lessons in leadership, discipline, perseverance, and fair play. Student-athletes also, in addition to their coursework, engage in research with faculty members, complete internships, and hold leadership positions within student organizations.

College photographer Larry Pacilio was embedded within the Pioneer football team this past fall. He provides an inimitable picture of how student-athletes, such as Andrew Benkwitt '13, Adam Luczak '13, Willie Simmons '14, and Shawn Mitchell '15, balance the rigors of athletic success and academic achievement.

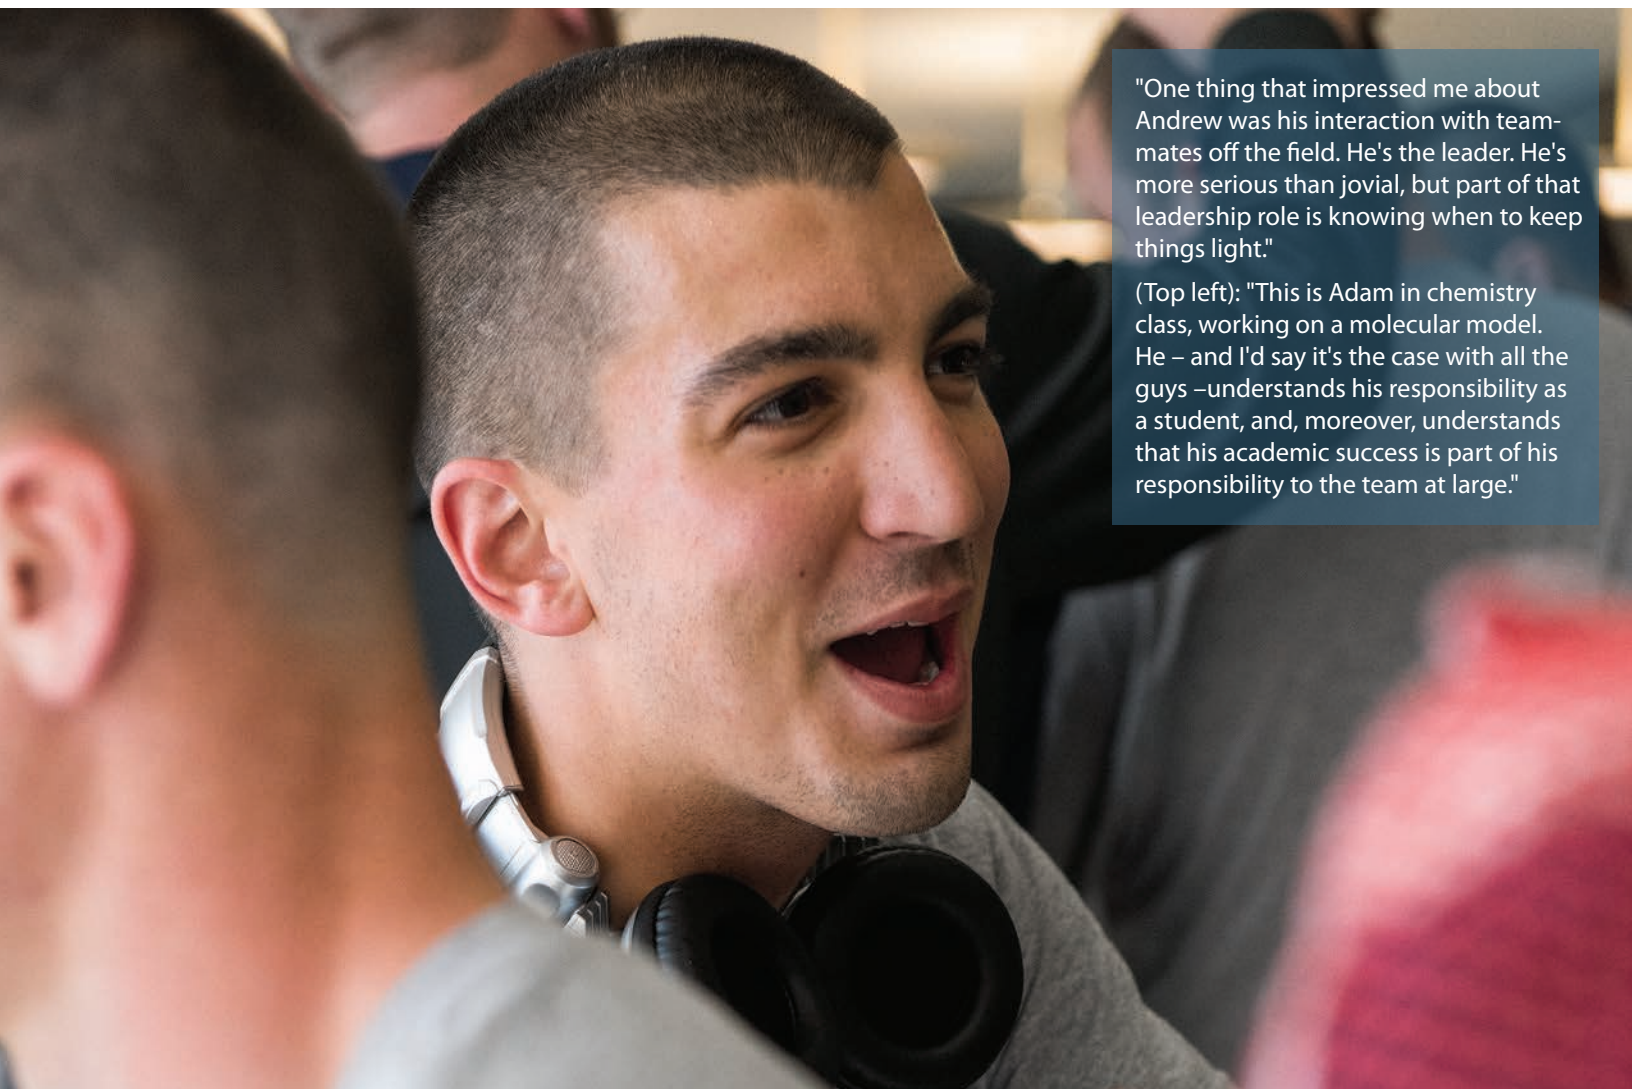

"Sean is a sophomore. He's also on the basketball team, and early in his career, he's already made significant contributions in both sports. He approaches the game the same way he does his studies – with a great deal of passion and energy." (Below) "Willie is just a very nice and gregarious kid. He sort of assumes an alter ego on the field, which is not to say that he takes unfair shots."

"One thing that impressed me about Andrew was his interaction with teammates off the field. He's the leader. He's more serious than jovial, but part of that leadership role is knowing when to keep things light."

(Top left): "This is Adam in chemistry class, working on a molecular model. He – and I'd say it's the case with all the guys – understands his responsibility as a student, and, moreover, understands that his academic success is part of his responsibility to the team at large."

"What struck me most of all is how much of a team these guys are. I think that's why they're winning."

The Charge.

UC Board members reflect on what it means to be a Trustee.

Trustees are in the news, it seems.

As the national spotlight has shone on the Penn State controversy and other recent high-profile incidents on campuses across the country, the role of university and college boards of trustees has been subject to much closer scrutiny than ever before.

Like their counterparts in other industries, university and college boards have an obligation to perform as ambassadors, stewards, and fiduciaries of the institutions they serve. However, in today's increasingly complex higher education environment, the role of a trustee carries with it a scope of responsibilities and purpose that few, including those who have served on boards of corporations or even other not-for-profit organization, might appreciate.

For a closer look at just what it means to be the trustee of an institution of higher learning, we sat down with five members of the UC Board of Trustees and asked them to reflect on different aspects of their experiences and how they approach the challenges of a new era in higher education.

Q: Can you describe how you were introduced to the Board and your motivation for accepting your appointment and the responsibility?

Mark Pilipczuk: I was introduced to the College's original 10-year Strategic Plan in 2000 when President Hutton came down to visit me at my office in Virginia. He showed me the plan, and I remember thinking, "Wow, this makes a lot of sense." And so a couple of years later I was asked to join the National Alumni Council (NAC) and began paying more attention to what was happening at Utica College.

We did a presentation to the Board about an alumni engagement survey that was done in about 2004, and we made some recommendations. During lunch I was approached, and they said, "Hey, have you ever thought about serving on the Board?" That was a little surprising to me because I had this longer time window in mind, thinking that if I did some good work on the NAC I might have the opportunity to serve in five or 10 years. Within a year or so I was put up for election and I went through the selection process. My motivation was that I wanted to give back to the College.

Heidi Hoeller: I had been in contact with [Director of Development] Anthony Villanti and talked to him when he came to Boston for an alumni event. I enjoyed visiting with him because he was keeping me up to date on things that were happening at the College. I felt like in Boston I couldn't really contribute or participate, but I asked him if there was any way that I could get involved, and he mentioned to me that there might be an opening on the Board, and asked if it was something that I'd be interested in.

The more I thought about it, the more I realized I was interested because that would help me feel more connected to my college, and, at the time, even though Utica is about four or five hours away from Boston, I have client responsibilities in Utica, and my parents are still in Utica, so I was going back to the area quite frequently. So I said that I was interested, and he mentioned it to President Hutton, who then reached out to me and invited me to submit my credentials to the Board to see if the Board would be interested.

Ronald Cuccaro: (I joined the Board) the year President Hutton came on. I believe it was 1998.

I was asked to be an alumni trustee. There was one trustee who was selected from the alumni to serve on the Board. Generally it was for one term. I served that term, then I was asked to come on board as a regular trustee.

I've since been elected to serve several terms, including a period as chair. Prior to that, I had been involved within the community and had helped with some past campaigns. Utica College was very important in my development. It has played such a large role in my life as well as in the life of this community. The College is Heidi Hoeller '91 is an audit partner at Pricewaterhouse Coopers LLP in Boston, specializing in the insurance industry. She is chair of the College's Board Audit Committee.

Ronald Mason '74 is vice president of human resources at Quinnipiac University in Hamden, CT. He previously served as chief administrative and human resources officer at Planned Parenthood Federation of America in New York, and held the top human resources executive position for the world's third largest ad agency, BBDO Worldwide in New York.

development. It has played such a large role in my life as well as in the life of this community. The College is very important for a lot of reasons here, especially for the opportunity it provides to young people. For most of the same reasons it was a good fit when I came here (as a student) it was a good fit in terms of my joining the Board.

Ronald Mason: This is my second stint on the Board. The first stint was when the College hired President Hutton. I was not able to fulfill my term because my wife became ill, so I took time to take care of her. I always wanted to go back on the Board.

How I got on the Board initially is that I had come up to the campus for Black Alumni Weekend, and gave a speech. I got to talking with Larry Bull, who was the Board chair at the time. Larry and I became friendly, and he said, "You know, we need somebody like you on the Board, and you've got a constituency that really cares about issues that affect Utica College." So, in some respects, I joined the Board as a representative of the black alumni.

In terms of why I came back on the Board the second time, my feeling was I never got to fulfill my obligation, one, to the black alumni, and then more importantly my obligation to Utica College and the other trustees, who believed someone like myself with my skill set would be valuable to the Board. Upon moving back into higher education – I started my career in higher education and then spent many years in the corporate sector before coming to Quinnipiac – I became clear that I wanted to again serve on the Utica College Board. That's when I approached President Hutton.

Robert Brvenik: I was recruited by President Hutton and [Senior Vice President and Chief Advancement Officer] Laura Casamento over a period of probably a year or so. I really hadn't had much contact with the College for a couple of decades. Just meeting President Hutton, who is pretty dynamic, and hearing about the great things that were happening at UC, it rekindled my interest in the College, and just the thought of being able to give back.

When I was at UC, I was senior class president so I got a chance to sit in on some of the Foundation Board meetings many, many years ago. I kind of thought back to that process and how impressed I was back then at the people who were dedicating their time and their resources to help grow the College. I looked at it as, "Here's my time to give back."

Q: How do you view your role as a trustee, and what do you see as your primary duties and contributions?

HH: Well, I serve different roles. As the Audit Committee chair, I'm responsible for leading those meetings and providing oversight of the auditors, asking questions of both the auditors and the administration.

That for me is an easy role because I'm an audit partner and I'm familiar with that process.

I think the role of the Board is to help administration make decisions by listening to the points of view of different people from different backgrounds who might be looking at a decision different and to make sure administration is taking into account all perspectives.

MP: I think it's to set the long-term strategic vision for the College – 10, 20, 30 years down the road. We try to make sure that the College is viable for the long term and then has the resources to achieve that vision. That means money; that means buildings; that means leadership. I view my responsibilities as a board member as extremely important because of the long-term implications of what Utica College does in terms of educating people for rewarding and meaningful professional careers and responsible citizenry. It's not an operational, day-to-day type of thing.

RC: I think a board is primarily responsible for the stewardship – they're fiduciaries. Our main role is to support the president, to carry out the mission of the College, and, with that, to help shape, along with all the constituencies of the College, the mission, to monitor the strategic plan and to make sure it is accomplished. Not on a day-to-day basis, though. That's very important.

RM: As a member of the cabinet at Quinnipiac, I don't expect for the trustees to tell me how to do my job, but I expect for them to talk with me about the kinds of key initiatives and issues that we think this university and its viability are going to face. I don't think that that's at all different in terms of the way that I see my role as a trustee for Utica College. By way of governance, a board sets broad policy, broad objectives, accountability, integrity to the process – the kinds of things that are important in setting some of the culture and some of the ways in which we all want to operate our organization. But the day-to-day management of it should rest with those who are charged with carrying out the mission.

RB: The role of the trustees is certainly that we're members of the College's leadership team. We support the administration in their goal of working to deliver a superior experience for our student body. Certainly we're stewards of the College. We're there to always keep first and foremost the College's best interest forefront. But when it comes down to it, we're all there for one reason. We're there for the students, and we're there to provide a great experience for them. I think that's what everybody keeps top-of-mind.

Q: How has the Board changed or evolved over your tenure?

RC: When I started, the College had just become independent from a legal and financial standpoint. For the first time in the College's history, it had its own board of trustees that was empowered to hire a president, shape its mission, and be directly responsible for the College's future. It evolved from a foundation board to an independent board, and during my tenure, it's been great to see Utica develop to the point where it's now fully able to stand on its own. There was a time when some people thought Utica College wouldn't exist without Syracuse, and it's been proven that Utica College is a very successful entity all in itself and a very distinct institution.

RM: I think the changes are greater today than they were back some years ago. The issues back then were around how to take this small college and begin to evolve it into more of a contemporary school and away from a school that is not so well known outside of certain circles.

Today's pressures around higher education are even greater. The numbers and demographics of those who are eligible to think about college in the next four to five years are changing, such that it's smaller than it has been at any point in the life cycle of the people going to school. There are more choices, and 80 percent of college-eligible young people are picking public education over private education, largely because of the price-point differential. That means that private universities struggle mightily, particularly if they are tuition dependent, against the public, taxpayer-supported university structure.

MP: I think we've continued to get better. I've had the opportunity to work on the Board under three very, very strong board chairs, and each one of them has continued to push the Board's performance to a higher level in terms of being more strategic, being more thoughtful, providing more insight into the College. It hasn't been stagnant.

Over just the past several years there's been an increase in scrutiny of higher education. The IRS is looking more carefully at our 990 [federal return for tax exempt organizations] and how we are governing as a board. We have to always make sure that we have good people on the team.

“From my point of view, there’s a direct and unbroken line from the Quonset huts and rented chairs in Oneida Square to what we’re doing today. We are still reaching out to people who want to transform their lives.”

- Mark Pilipczuk '88, Vice Chair

RB: We’re very lucky. We have a very deep board in terms of experience. There are a lot of past board chairs who are still on the board, which is wonderful. I think since I started it’s becoming a little more geographically diverse from what it was. If you looked back at the board 10 years ago, most board members were pretty much centered around the Utica area. So you’re seeing more geographic diversity, and the overall diversity of the board has increased as well. And particularly in the past couple of years, you’ve seen a number of talented younger trustees come on, which is nice.

Q: What role do you see yourself playing insofar as stewardship of the College’s mission?

HH: That’s a big question. To me the mission of Utica College is to provide a quality, multidimensional education to students who might not otherwise have such an excellent opportunity. When I was a student, Utica College offered me a quality education beyond what I thought was within my reach. When administration presents new ideas, I’m imagining myself back in the position of being a student and asking, “Is this a positive change? Is this going to help us execute our mission?”

RC: In the final analysis, the Board is responsible for the overall health of the College. There are a lot of constituencies it needs to work with, but when all is said and done, it’s the Board that is responsible for the College’s mission and making sure it remains solvent and perpetuates. In a very fragile higher education environment nowadays, there’s a lot of pressure on colleges with the rising costs, the need for more financial aid to keep supporting students who want to come here but might not have the wherewithal to do it. It’s very, very difficult and challenging, but we manage to do it.

RM: Certainly it involves, over time, defining what that mission is. It’s not to assume that it stays the same forever. It’s being open and recognizing that we have to understand that we are in business environment that says, “the weak shall perish, and the strong shall survive.” If your expense structure is different from what your revenue structure is in terms of where it needs to be, then you run the risk of not being able to be as competitive in the environment and potentially being left behind. And so when I think about defining our mission, it’s looking at it in terms of where’s our niche, what we feel our strengths are, and then how we can articulate why Utica College makes sense in the life cycle of our constituents.

RB: Back in its founding years, the College served returning GIs and people who were the first in their family to obtain a college education. That’s carried over to today. Providing an opportunity to people who may not otherwise have that opportunity, I think, is a noble mission and probably one of the strongest reasons why I agreed to join to the board. You are making a difference, and you are providing an opportunity to a number of people who may not have the opportunity elsewhere. It just kind of makes you feel good at the end of the day.

Q: As far as your responsibilities as a trustee are concerned, what lessons have you taken away from incidents at Penn State and/or Virginia Tech? How have these incidents re-set your priorities and perspectives?

MP: I’ve got to tell you, when those incidents occurred, at Penn State and down here at the University of Virginia, I thought, ‘I’m glad I’m not on the boards of those two institutions.’ You just pray you’re never in a position like that.

After the tragedy at Virginia Tech, we had a board meeting not long thereafter, and we said, “What should we do in this instance?” I think the text messaging alert system we now have in place came up as a result of that. When you hear these incidents you sit down and you just ask yourself, “Are we doing everything we can do? Should we be doing anything else?” Trying to project what type of incidents might happen is very difficult to do.

HH: I think a lot of people don’t know what boards do until something bad happens, and then the board is put in a negative light. For all of us these incidents have highlighted the importance of the role the board plays as well as the larger responsibility. What I like about this board is the trustees are really great at raising any issue to the group. Even outside of meetings, in our individual discussions and interactions, we're exchanging our points of view and keeping dialogue going, no matter the issue. That's one thing about that I was really impressed with when I joined – not only the experience and innovative ideas represented by the members of the board, but the trust and openness we have with one another.

RC: I think it resolved the awareness that you need to take action if something is not right – that certain things cannot be tolerated no matter what impact it might have on the College. That's the Board responsibility – to make sure things are right, and when they're not, to take quick and swift action. I think it has firmed up the need for a board to remain in touch with respect to the kind of action that is required when something is determined to be wrong.

RM: We have accountability to all of the College's constituencies in terms of communication and a level of transparency. We have accountability to the College's values and for setting the institutional culture – in effect to say, "This is who we are, and this is what we believe." It is clear that we believe as a board that there are certain behaviors that we find unacceptable and intolerable. This helps the president and his staff understand our expectations. It's clearly defining what those cultural norms look like.

RB: In my mind those incidents were failures of transparency and communication. Once again, the mission of a college – be it UC or any other college – is to provide an enriching experience for your student body. That has to be number one in your mind at all times.

I think President Hutton's administration does a real good job in terms of communicating with the board. We're very lucky in that our board chairs traditionally have been very active in the College. Larry Gilroy is on campus all the time. There's a handful of, I would call them, senior board members who are on campus a lot, which is good. For a lot of different reasons I think we've been very good as a board, working with the administration in terms of transparency.

Ronald Cuccaro '66 is president and CEO of Adjusters International in Utica, NY, a public adjusting and disaster recovery consulting organization. He is the publisher of Adjusting Today, an international trade newsletter. He has previously served as chair of the Utica College Board of Trustees.

Mark Pilipczuk '88 is vice president of marketing services for Neustar Inc., a leading global provider of information and analysis services for the telecommunications, entertainment, and marketing industries. He now serves as a Vice Chair of Utica College's Board of Trustees.

Robert Brvenik '77 is principle partner of Paragon Outlets. Prior to joining the company, he was associated for 10 years with Prime Retail and 13 years with Pyramid Management Group, where he served in several key capacities including chief financial officer and chief operating officer. He previously held positions at Arthur Andersen and Citicorp. He resides in Bethesda, MD.

Q: What do you know now that you didn't know upon joining the Board, both in terms of Utica College and the responsibility itself?

MP: I think I've learned a lot about the shared governance model of an institution of higher learning, which is very different from the business world. The shared governance model is unique in that it brings different perspectives on how we educate people. You have faculty, staff, students, administration, and the Board of Trustees, and you have influence from the outside as well. That shared governance model is unique in higher education. It provides a longer term and more of a measured approach in how you do things. I didn't know how that really worked when I got on the Board. I read about it, but now that I've seen it over the course of many years, it's an interesting model and it takes some time to fully appreciate it.

RC: In higher education, consensus-building is very important, and shared governance is paramount. Shared governance isn't necessarily something that happens a lot in private business. I think business could use more consensus-building, and to some respects, the college system could use more rapid decision-making, especially given how quickly higher education is changing today.

HH: It's a lot different from what I thought it was going to be – but different in a good way. I feel a lot more involved and I've spent a lot more time at the College than I thought I would. It is not a cushy board position, where someone shows up a few times a year to listen to administration talk about different issues. It is really an involved board. Even outside of committee meetings and full board meetings, there have been a lot of times when I have been asked to bring in my expertise and offer a different point of view. For me that's been the biggest thing. I'm really satisfied with the amount of involvement and responsibility in addition to how much the other boards members really listen and interact with one another and respect each other's viewpoint.

RM: I think what I have now is a level of understanding of how complex the job of administering a small private college can be in this changing climate. The risk associated with not being successful is even higher today, both from a reputational point of view as well as from a financial point of view. Years ago, the board was primarily a fundraising board, again because the management (of the College) was so strongly in the hands of Syracuse University. I think that over time with all the kind of compliance issues and the incidents that come up that really demand accountability on behalf of those who are ultimately accountable, which is the board of trustees, has me understanding that this is really a very important role that we all have to take seriously and recognize it's not appropriate to rubber stamp.

RB: One thing I love about going to board meetings is the issues are so complex and thought-provoking, they not only get me thinking in regards of how they affect the College, I always come back and look at my business and say, "Okay, what are my challenges in my business? What's similar and what's different in terms of what I just talked through at the board meeting, and how I bring the knowledge and the experiences from the board meeting and how do I incorporate it into my business?"

A rewarding part of being a trustee is that, every May, you get to see a great graduating class of outstanding people, and you get to see how your institution affects positively the lives of so many people, both on campus and within the community. You also make great contacts and enjoy great networking with your fellow trustees. You learn a lot from them. But you also bring a mindset and a skill set back to your company that you didn't have before.

Q: How has your experience on the Board influenced your idea of Utica College? In what ways do you see the College differently?

MP: The funny thing is it hasn't changed that much in my mind. We were pioneers when we were down on Oneida Square. We were pioneers when we built the campus on Burrstone Road with frankly not a lot of money. We were pioneers when we struck out from Syracuse University as our own independent institution without a large endowment to rely on. We’re pioneers as we’ve gone into online education.

“It’s a very competitive marketplace out there. For us to survive and thrive as an institution, we have to really stay at the forefront of change, and we have to focus on what we do well as an institution.”

– Robert Brvenik '77, Trustee

So, from my point of view, there’s a direct and unbroken line from the Quonset huts and rented chairs in Oneida Square to what we’re doing today. We are still reaching out to people who want to transform their lives. They used to be GIs coming back from the War. Now, they are mid-career professionals going into nursing as a second career opportunity, and in the future it will be something else. We’ve never stood still.

HH: It’s changed a lot because when I was a student, the College was still under Syracuse University. When I heard that Utica College was becoming an independent institution and going out on its own, I was worried and a little skeptical. Now I see the challenges that College is facing in terms of its ability to compete with other colleges as a stand-alone institution, and it’s amazing how well the College has been able to step up to these challenges. For me it’s an exciting time to be a part of that. That’s what looks different to me, especially when I think about when I was a student and the College was very closely tied to Syracuse University and everything was done the Syracuse way. Now, Utica is able to stand on its own, and now there is such a thing as the Utica way.

RC: A tremendous amount has happened in the 14 years I’ve been involved. Utica College really is a different institution today – in very positive ways. The Board does add a lot by supporting the president, the faculty, the administration, the students, and the alumni, making sure that the mission is accomplished and can continue to be accomplished. It’s very proactive and is doing an awful lot to shape the College for the future and the changes it’s going to face. Having a board that’s in tune, in touch, is aware of what’s going on day-to-day from a higher level and has a long-range vision is very important.

RM: I would never want Utica College to veer away from the specialness that I think it has, and the specialness is when the students talk about how much they get to know their professors and the impact that they’ve had on their lives. I think that’s unique.

At the board retreat, when I found out that we were able to get Utica College diplomas, I asked President Hutton if I could get a UC diploma and he accommodated me. I’m proud to say I’m from Utica College because I think that scrappy little college helped me to achieve all the things that I’ve achieved. It taught me so much about myself and helped me in ways in which I didn’t realize until much later in my life. And I’m so proud to now again be in a position to try to ensure that other generations of students get the opportunity to experience that specialness of being at UC.

RB: The experience you get now going to Utica College now is much more robust. It’s richer. When I went to school here, it was mostly commuters, and it was kind of like a community college experience. It has basically gone from that to a national-type school with national reach.

It’s a very competitive marketplace out there. For us to survive and thrive as an institution, we have to really stay at the forefront of change, and we have to focus on what we do well as an institution. We need to make sure that we’re an industry leader in our segment. And if we do that, we’ll be just fine. ■

RISING FUTURES

Members of UC's Investment Club take stock of a new challenge.

It had a fairly humble beginning.

Back in the 1990s, when the UC Business and Economics Department opened a brokerage account as a kind of practical experiment in investing, the seed money was about $5,000. Now, two decades later, the portfolio is valued at around $72,000, much of that realized within the last three years.

It's an impressive return by any standard, and all the more impressive when you learn that it has been managed entirely by UC students since 2009.

"Students in the Investment Club have complete management responsibility over the portfolio," says Zhaodan Huang, Ph.D., associate professor of economics and the club's faculty advisor. "The students decide what stocks to buy, what to sell."

Huang says the portfolio was originally established and managed by William Blanchfield, professor emeritus of economics. Blanchfield invested the original $5,000 in a single firm – Wells Fargo – two decades ago and fostered its growth into the $40,000 fund that was placed under the Investment Club's responsibility in January 2009, while the smoke was still rising from the financial crisis. "He made a good amount of money for the fund over that time," says Huang.

In today's market, he stresses, it's important to diversify. Taking that into account, the Investment Club worked with Huang to establish some ground rules for managing the portfolio.

Watching the markets.

“When they started in 2009, they invested in large cap stocks like Apple, GE, Wells Fargo, and others – stocks with good name recognition. Thirty percent of the fund goes to stock index funds, like Vanguard and Morningstar. That is to ensure some level of diversification. No more than 10 percent of the portfolio can be invested in any single company, though occasionally they can make an exception if a really good opportunity comes along,” Huang says.

Thus far, their selections have paid off very well. The portfolio has earned something like $10,000 in profit on Apple holdings alone. “Compared with established benchmarks, they have done not badly at all,” says Huang, crediting their success to a rigorous – and, in fact, relatively open – process for choosing investments.

Working with real dollars

The club convenes Wednesdays at 4:00 p.m. in the First Source Federal Credit Union Trading Room in Hubbard Hall. A major agenda item at many of these meetings is consideration of proposals for new investment opportunities. Presentations are made by members to members, according to the club’s president, Joseph Smith ’14, a Brooklyn native and business economics major.

He says, “Some members of the club are designated portfolio managers. Part of their responsibility is to propose companies that they think may be of interest to us. Portfolio managers are required to make at least two presentations to the group per semester. We discuss the proposals and either vote on them or ask the presenter to bring back more information.”

If a company they propose is added to the portfolio, portfolio managers are also tasked with tracking its performance and regularly reporting back to the group.

Huang points out that not all of the trades are going to make money. But the process is appropriately deliberate and considered, in his estimation. “These are real dollars,” he says. “The students know this and are very serious about it.”

His vision for the club is that it should appeal to a diverse population of UC students, not just students in the Department of Business and Economics. The current academic year’s membership represents a relatively broad swath of majors, from the management-related programs to public relations, journalism, chemistry, and computer science. International students also participate.

“The club has a larger purpose than being an educational opportunity for management, finance, and business economics majors. It is a means of promoting investment literacy across the entire student body. Now that defined benefit retirement plans are giving way to 401(k) based plans, it is important for young people to understand how investments work before they go out into the world,” says Huang.

The challenge

UC business program alumnus Joseph Godley ’87 certainly shares Huang’s sentiment. A successful investment portfolio manager at Halcyon Asset Backed Advisors, a Hedge Fund he cofounded in 2006, he is unvarnished in his assessment of the lack of financial acumen among Americans in general and college students in particular.

"It's very troubling to see recent college graduates unable to grasp what is happening in the financial world, not understanding how to properly invest in a 401(k) or how to prepare a tax return," Godley says. "This goes beyond financial literacy. This is about survival."

Godley decided to do something about it. So he worked with faculty and development officers at UC to create the Portfolio Challenge.

Now in its second year, the Challenge invites students, faculty, staff, and alumni across the College community to compete as investors and portfolio managers. "The competitors start with a virtual investment account valued at $50,000, and they invest those imaginary dollars in stocks, bonds, exchange-traded funds (ETFs), options, and so on, using real-time data to inform their choices," Huang explains. "The best performing portfolios at the end of the academic year win the Challenge."

Four thousand dollars in prizes are awarded to the top 10 performers, with a $1,000 first prize, funded through a gift from Godley. This is twice the total purse offered in last year's round.

"We did two semester-long competitions in 2011-2012," Smith says. "There were no cash prizes during the fall semester challenge – that was kind of a test run to see how it would work. This year is the first time we're running it for the entire academic year."

Challenge rankings will be posted periodically by Associate Professor of Economics Rick Fenner. They will also run on the wrap-around stock ticker that adorns UC's Trading Room.

Godley sees the Portfolio Challenge as running on a five-year cycle. "You can get an idea of how a student does over their undergraduate career, how it works for them. And if it works out well, and I hope it does, and more and more people get involved, we'll continue the project," he says.

Smith says that he has taken up the Challenge, and he seems determined to finish strong. In that he is both a business economics major and president of the investment club, this is not surprising. Both Godley and Huang are hoping to attract a much wider spectrum of participants in the current round.

"It's not just about the business majors. You need the occupational therapy people, the construction management majors, the English majors," Godley says. "Everybody is eventually going to earn a paycheck. The question is, what are they going to do with that money?"

Positive motivation

It is Godley's hope, and that of the business and economics faculty, that the spirit of competition will inspire broader participation. He is also a firm believer in incentives. "Money is a great motivator. When you were a kid and your father said, if you wash my car I’ll give you a buck, what did you do? You went out and washed the car. By offering some kind of financial incentive, hopefully we’re getting more people to think, hey, I could win $1,000. Maybe I should go to the investment club meeting and see what all of this is about. It gets people thinking and motivated,” he says.

“EVERYBODY IS EVENTUALLY GOING TO GET A PAYCHECK. THE QUESTION IS, WHAT ARE THEY GOING TO DO WITH THAT MONEY? IT’S NOT WHAT YOU MAKE, IT’S WHAT YOU KEEP.”
- JOSEPH GODLEY ’87

This is very positive for the students, from Huang’s perspective. Both with respect to the Portfolio Challenge and their participation in the investment club, he feels that they will make the most of their opportunities to engage with the financial world. “Students tend to be good judges of stocks in the tech sector. They have a good sense of what will be a successful company. And even when they’re not certain, they will find investing an eye-opening experience,” says Huang.

Students like Smith who have career plans in the financial sector value the experience that the Challenge offers. They also appreciate the tools that have been made available through the trading room.

“It’s a great environment and it makes it possible for you to look at data on companies, check the news, and watch what’s going on in the market at the same time. It kind of mimics the atmosphere of an actual trading room. You get a sense of that experience, and that’s definitely a good thing,” he says.

Huang agrees, though he feels that adding Bloomberg terminals to the facility would greatly enhance the experience and generally raise the profile of UC’s business and economics programs. “Bloomberg offers a special rate to educational institutions, so hopefully at some point we can look into making that resource available to our students,” Huang says.

“Just having somebody go and sit down in front of a Bloomberg terminal is important. But you need to know how to operate it, you need to understand the advantages of it, and you need to understand the wealth of information that comes off of that terminal,” he says.

Through his initial contribution of $10,000 in the Portfolio Challenge, Godley is hoping to create some impetus towards this deeper understanding.

“You need to give people a little push sometimes, and hopefully they will become more evolved on the issue and make more informed decisions,” he says. ■

President's Report

June 1, 2011– May 31, 2012

A GREETING FROM THE CHAIR OF THE PIONEER SOCIETY.

Let me begin by saying what an honor it is for me to serve the Utica College community as a member of the Board of Trustees. When I was asked to lead the Pioneer Society leadership annual giving and recognition body, I eagerly accepted this important new responsibility.

The reason is simple. Contained within every new responsibility is another opportunity to make a real difference in the world. That has been one of the guiding principles of my life. It is also at the core of what makes Utica College such a unique institution.

Everyone associated with UC – our students, their families, the faculty and staff who serve them, my fellow alumni, and my colleagues on the Board – understands the value of stepping up whenever we are faced with a challenge. We know from our experiences in the workplace and the classroom that commitment and dedication can bring great rewards.

That is what the Pioneer Society is all about. It allows us the opportunity to express our appreciation to those alumni and friends of the College who demonstrate philanthropic leadership on an annual basis. Under the aegis of this Society, we can duly celebrate UC's most generous supporters for offering that added measure of commitment to our mission, year after year. They are true Pioneers in every respect.

I am looking forward to serving the Pioneer Society over the coming years and to welcoming new members as they “step up.” If you have not done so already, I invite you to join us in this effort. I think you will find that there is nothing so rewarding as playing a role in transforming the lives of deserving students.

Thank you for making a difference.

IN THE PHOTOGRAPHIC PERIPHERY

This edition of the President's Report features photographic highlights from an eventful year on the UC campus.

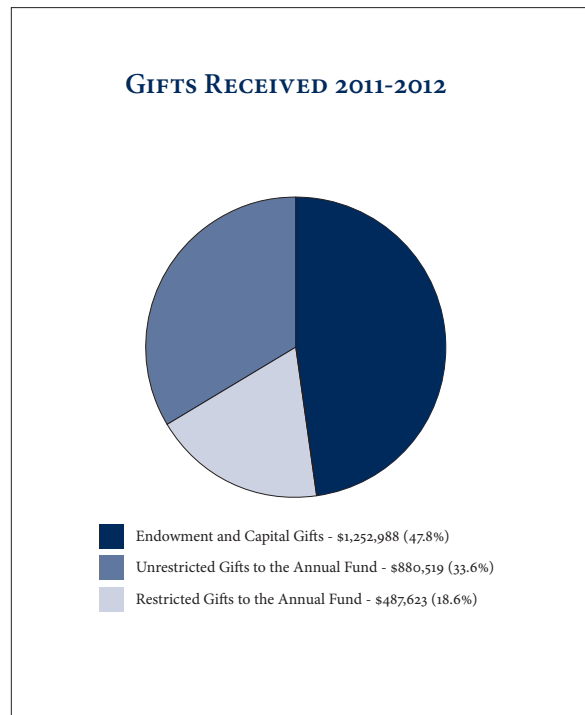

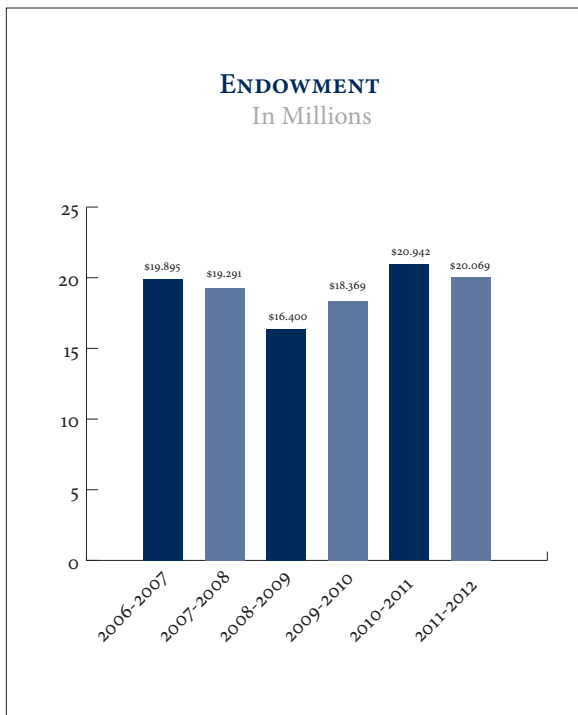

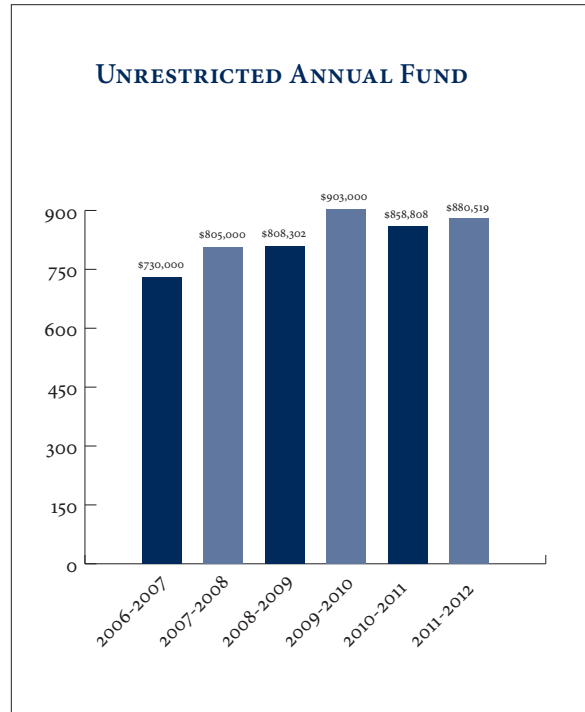

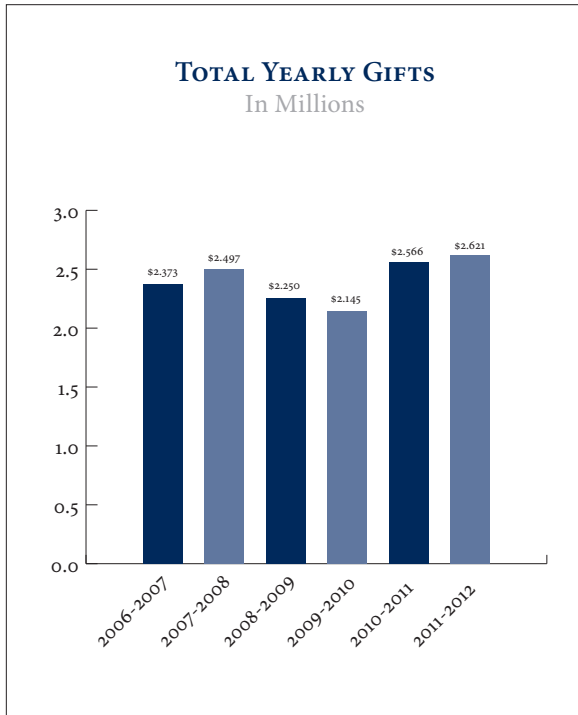

This President's Report highlights the names of those who made a gift to Utica College during the 2011-12 fiscal year, beginning June 1, 2011 and ending May 31, 2012. Gifts to the College received after May 31, 2012 will be recognized in the 2012-13 President's Report.

Every effort has been made to ensure accuracy and completeness. In the event that an error or omission is found, we sincerely apologize and ask that you contact the Office of Advancement at (315) 792-3114 or e-mail avillanti@utica.edu so we can correct our records.

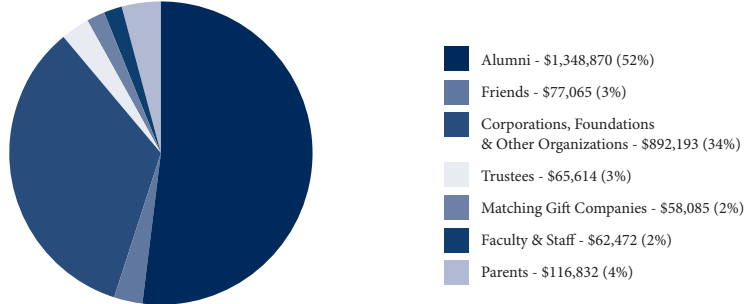

Please note, in assembling the Honor Roll of Donors, professional suffixes have been omitted due to space constraints.

Thank you.

THE SUMMIT SOCIETY

The Summit Society recognizes trustees, alumni, parents, and friends of Utica College who, each year, provide exceptional leadership through their gifts of $10,000 or more to the College through the Unrestricted Annual Fund. These individuals set an exceptional example of philanthropic leadership in order to ensure that Utica College can respond to the most pressing needs of its students and faculty each academic year.

FOUNDATION FELLOWS

The Foundation Fellows is the gift society that honors Utica College's most generous donors. This society recognizes those leadership donors whose lifelong commitment and investment in Utica College is critical to the institution's future. Each year, gifts received from Foundation Fellows represent more than 80 percent of the College's total gifts.

ON TEACHING

FACULTY REFLECT ON THEIR FIRST YEARS AT UC

What motivates a person to become a college professor? How does each individual approach the significant personal, professional, and practical challenges of fostering learning at a very high level? Every educator is certain to have her or his own unique answers to these questions.

Fortunately, we are offered a rare window into the thoughts of some of UC's most talented professors. Early in their tenure at College, faculty members are asked to submit a reflective statement on their experience in the classroom and as part of the UC community. Two have agreed to share these refreshingly insightful essays with us, allowing us to follow the arc of their commitment to helping our students succeed.

“Thank you for all the help – I couldn’t have done it without all the feedback.”

The above comment was neatly printed on the back of a pink student evaluation form at the end of the Summer 2005 semester. The comment captures the essence of the student-teacher relationship as I see it: it is the teacher’s role to support the student’s success by providing appropriate feedback. I see the teacher and student as partners in the learning process.

While this student appeared particularly grateful for feedback that (presumably) led to genuine success, another student’s comment points to the tenuous relationship between student and teacher. A second student (same class, same semester) commented, “She’s so damn positive. I’d turn in really bad stuff (in my opinion), and I’d get it back with loads of constructive comments and always lots of positives.”

Although this comment is supportive of my teaching, the significance of it to me is how it points to the idea that teachers usually do not know if the material their students have handed in represents a student’s greatest effort, or if it is recognized by the student as “really bad stuff.” How is a teacher to know?

If I tear apart a paper on which a student has worked very hard, I risk losing that student’s trust in me as one who can provide the kind of support to bolster success, as reflected in the opening comment. I value the student-teacher relationship and recognize that I hold the power to make or break students’ academic lives. At the risk of being assessed “so damn positive,” I believe I have accomplished a good balance with students and will continue to look for the strengths in student work and support students toward achieving more.

CLASSROOM CLIMATE

Overall, the student comments on the pink evaluation sheets reflect the positive climate that I work to achieve in my classes. I aim to create an environment in my classes where students feel free to take risks, share thoughts, and develop questions.

Some of this is achieved through my use of the Learning Preferences and Personal Interest Survey. While, at first, I thought students might balk at completing it, the overall response has been positive. In exchange for learning about my students, I have questioned how much I should disclose about myself – do students need to know my background? My challenges? My intellectual passions? In the process of surveying students about their learning preferences and personal interests, I have found a way to share information about myself that seems to put the students at ease.

It didn't seem fair that I would ask for student information without sharing some of my own, so when I collect their surveys, I tell them about myself. I will continue this process. The reciprocity feels right, and students have indicated they appreciate it. One student commented that the process made me seem "more human."

The course syllabus may be the first impression students have of their professors and may set the tone for classroom climate. With this in mind, I have adopted a softer, more student-friendly syllabus than the ones with which I started. Rather than viewing the syllabus as an opportunity to "be firm" and "lay down the law," I have come, instead, to see it as an invitation to community.

While I want my syllabi to outline class activities, set out a course calendar, and give students a sense of where we're going together and why, I have worked to have my syllabi create a more "inviting" feel. If I want students to fully participate in the learning process, then I want them to be invited into the relationship. It is my goal that the syllabus defines the parameters of our relationship in a way that is student-friendly and inviting, which should set a tone for classroom climate.

As part of my attentiveness to this relationship for the learning process, I have begun to share with students an outline of my Teaching Assumptions. My goal in sharing my assumptions with students is to give them insight into what I bring to the teaching/learning process. I want to be as explicit as I can be because I believe that we work more effectively together when our goals and assumptions are clear.

Furthermore, I believe that it is good practice for all teachers to know what assumptions they have and be able to articulate them, and I do my best to model what I teach. Sharing my assumptions with my students is one such example.

At the time I wrote my last reflective statements, I stated a goal of "bumping up" the intellectual rigor of my courses. I have worked to achieve this, in part, by working in quizzes based on assigned reading. My students have provided feedback that I should make them more "accountable" for the reading assignments.

My first approach with students was to trust them to read on their own and reserve class time solely for discussion based on the reading. Perhaps students could "get away with" participating in class discussion without having read the material as assigned. Quizzing students on the reading may be one way of "bumping up" the intellectual rigor of my courses. I also have an on-going task of identifying appropriate supplemental readings to enhance our resources. I continue to hold onto the goal of increasing the intellectual rigor of my courses, and I am working to find just the right balance.

As I step back and look at the totality of my experience as I move forward, I have learned some valuable lessons. Primarily, my teaching, my teaching success, the success of my students, and the success of my students' future students is incredibly important to me. It is joyful hard work for me, and it is highly satisfying. For this reason, I have learned that I should elect not to teach in the summer (as I did my first summer) so that I can achieve more balance at developing my courses, conducting research and writing (which will support my teaching), and reading to keep myself current for my teaching. I look forward with great enthusiasm to developing my teaching skills. ■

Patrice Hallock is associate professor and interim chair of education.

"My first year at Utica College has been a wonderful one, and my experiences here have reinforced everything I believe about teaching chemistry."

Some students in a chemistry course will be pursuing careers in chemistry while others will be following a path in a different science or in medicine. Still others will be finished with their entire natural science experience after one or two introductory classes. If a course is structured to introduce concepts, theories, and independent thought, it becomes rewarding and relevant to all the students. It also becomes exciting for the instructor; watching the students challenge themselves and grow, and being able to help in the process, is a large part of what makes teaching so rewarding for me.

I teach chemistry to my students, since that is my field and their courses, but I hope they leave the classroom with more than just a memory of chemical structures and laboratory experiments.

I also try to foster active learning in my classrooms; the more the students take control of their learning, working through problems and asking themselves questions, the better the experience will be for them. Part of that challenge is to make them realize that there is more to the subject than simply the exams. The use of case studies, to be solved in small groups followed by an all-class discussion, has been helpful in making the material more interesting to the class.

ORGANIC CHEMISTRY II

The second semester of the organic chemistry sequence is meant to expand on the concepts from first semester, particularly mechanisms and total syntheses, and lead the students to a point where they can solve reasonably advanced reaction schemes. The class make-up was, as is typical of many colleges, made up primarily of sophomore and junior biology majors with an interest in medicine. These students, understandably, have little interest in total organic syntheses in and of themselves. I look at these advanced problems as being a method by which they can practice their critical thinking and problem solving skills.

There is a reason why organic chemistry is often seen as an indicator for a student's future success in medical school; the combination of memorization, pattern identification and problem solving that is found in organic chemistry uses a process similar to what they will be expected to do in medical school. I naturally hope that, along the way, they learn an appreciation for organic chemistry as well.

My class goals were for them to (a) have a working understanding of complex organic chemistry reactions, specifically carbonyl chemistry and ring-formations, (b) be able to write out chemical mechanisms as not only a way of predicting reaction products but also as a way of developing clear and logical thought, and (c) begin to understand how a chemical synthesis is designed and carried out experimentally.

In an effort to achieve these goals I tried to introduce familiar examples, such as natural products or common materials, as a start for discussion. The book I chose for this course, Organic Chemistry (Janice Smith), has a strong leaning toward biochemical examples, which supplements my polymer science bias well.

"I saw evidence that the challenge was to get them actively involved with the material – everything else followed."

I broke down the problem solving into little pieces of varying formality. I assigned homework problems from the textbook, for which they had the complete answer key, every class period. I did not collect these problems, although I went through them at a weekly evening review session. There were problem sets, handed out in the classroom made up of my questions and similar to exam questions, given out approximately once a week. I went through these answers in class; they are not collected but I did supply a small amount of pressure in the classroom for them to participate and offer answers.

There were take-home quizzes this semester, usually one a week, which were collected and graded. There are three closed-book exams in the class. Students could easily follow missed assignments since they all appear on [the online course management system].

Another strategy I used was to take advantage of the integrated laboratory/lecture nature of the class. The students received one grade, from me, from their combined performance in the lecture and laboratory. This is why I have chosen to write about them together in this statement. The laboratory experiments were intended to match closely with the lecture material. One goal of the laboratory part of the course was to make the experiments a natural extension of the class work; once a week they would have the opportunity to try out, in a lab, what they had been learning about in class.

The other goal of the laboratory component of the course was to explore the parts of an organic synthesis. At what point does the reaction end and the separation begin? How do we purify a compound? How do we measure its purity? We performed a number of syntheses, and by the end of the semester they were reasonably comfortable working on their own. The project that was worked on the entire semester was the identification of a chemical unknown.

Whenever they had a little extra time in the lab, perhaps during a half-hour reflux, they were to work through a qualitative analysis of their unknown. They were so nervous about this, but at the same time embraced the idea so completely. I would hear heated discussions about solubility in the hallways as they tried to determine their unknowns. Again I saw evidence that the challenge was to get them actively involved with the material – everything else followed.

The final project of the semester was to write a formal laboratory report, similar to an ACS journal article, detailing how they identified their unknown compound.

The laboratory that was the student favorite this semester was a case study that I fashioned, with Dr. Kim Specht from Denison University, after a CSI crime lab. They were to use separation techniques, a precipitation test, a fingerprinting test, some GC-MS data, and the FTIR to determine if two bodies found on “Enol Lake” were the result of an accidental death or foul play.

The students were having so much fun analyzing the props that I gave them (bits of “clothing” from the “corpse,” water samples) that they didn’t realize that I had integrated a number of techniques that they had previously found difficult and strange. They were so focused on finding the answer that they forgot to be scared and confused, and they honestly wanted to solve the case. I was very pleased with the results of this laboratory and have been looking for ways to apply this method to other topics.

Throughout the semester the students seemed to respond well to my approach in this class. They were willing to work through problems, try, fail, try again, always ready with a question or a comment or a shout of joy when they succeeded. This class was an absolute pleasure to teach.

I do have questions, however, about how best to use my classroom time; specifically I would have liked to have spent less time lecturing and even more time working through problems. The students have given me no particular feedback on this topic, but it something I have been thinking about since I have started weekly review/problem sessions in the evenings again this semester. In these sessions we solve homework problems in small groups with students taking turns going to the board and describing their solutions to their classmates. I wish I could find a balance in which there would be more time during the regular class periods to focus on group problem solving, and am thinking of ways to accomplish that. I will be using a survey this semester dealing with this particular issue. ■

Onto the Next Stage

WIRELESS EXEC/BASSIST
GREELEY FORD '77 STARTS
A NEW CHAPTER.

Back in 1992, it had sounded like a good idea. A full-bore dance band with a horn section, much like the ones they played in decades before, only supported by state-of-the-art live sound technology. Wouldn't that be a great way to make music?

Twenty years later, it still is.

The idea behind Classified, Greeley Ford '77 recalls, was first suggested to him by the band's co-founder, keyboardist Freddie Facioli, a friend and former bandmate. "Freddy and I played together in a band called Ascension in the 1970s. We were talking one day, and he said, 'Imagine if Ascension had had a sound system of the quality that's available today, where would we be right now?' And I said, great, let's do it," he says.

This wasn't going to be a "money" band, they decided. It would be just for fun and part-time, since all of the musicians they wanted to include were already in other bands.

"Every Wednesday night was practice," says Ford, "and we would tell each player, here's the deal: when you come to audition, you don't even have to bring your instrument. Just bring your checkbook. We want to know how much you can kick in every week."

"In this way, they recruited some of the best – and busiest – professional musicians in central New York. The list of the member's names and professional credits ended up being so long, it looked like a classified ad."

Hmmm... Classified, Ford thought. Not a bad name for the band. Equal opportunity entertainment. Everyone would be welcome to share in their enthusiasm for high-energy, brass-powered dance music. "We were determined from the start to play the songs we wanted to play, instead of always thinking about what people might want to hear," says Ford. "If we play it well, we thought, people will like it."

After some weeks of rehearsal, they had an opportunity to test that theory at a large dance club in Utica called Temptations, where they booked a string of Wednesday night gigs. What happened next was beyond anyone's expectations.

"Our first few gigs, we had 800 to 900 people in the place. We were just stunned," Ford recalls. "Utica loves good music. People heard about the band getting together. They came out to hear us – on a Wednesday night, no less – and they were fantastic."

The word was out. Classified had arrived, and it quickly became the most talked about band in the area.

The 10-piece group rocked clubs and concert venues in the years that followed, sharing the stage with world-class artists like Earth, Wind, and Fire, The Commodores, KC and the Sunshine Band, Rare Earth, Eddie Money, Maynard Ferguson, Gap Mangione, and others. It was a successful run by any measure, but taxing, particularly for a group of seasoned musicians who had home lives to consider. "We had guys with young families. You can't go out for the weekend and come back with no money. The wives will let that go on for about two weeks before saying, hey, this isn't working out for us. So we decided that, if we were going to stay together, we had to earn enough to make it worthwhile. We redesigned the band, came up with a new business plan, and defined what our market was," says Ford.

By the end of the 1990s, Classified had transitioned into performing primarily at major corporate events, weddings, and private parties, including special celebrations like the 2007 kick-off gala for UC's Achieve Comprehensive Campaign.

"We've been completely over-the-top successful with that, too," Ford says. "It's been awesome."

But all things come to an end. Classified will close up shop over the coming months. It will be the end of the most recent chapter of Ford's life on the bandstand – a second career of sorts that has been with him from a very early age.

GOING PRO

Ford's enthusiasm for performing music was born in the clubs and convention halls around Asbury Park, New Jersey, his hometown, where he had opportunity to rock out to some of the biggest names in pop music in the late 1960s and early 1970s. "Yes, Humble Pie, Guess Who, Black Sabbath, Grand Funk Railroad, you just name it – Billy Cobham, King Crimson, they were all there, playing Asbury Park every weekend," he says.

When Ford was a student at Christian Brothers Academy in Lincroft, NJ in the early seventies, he saw Bruce Springsteen back when "The Boss" was just a bar band.

"I have pictures of an afternoon concert with about 15 or 20 people listening to Springsteen's band," he recalls. "Then when I came up to Utica College in 1973, I picked up Time and Newsweek one day and he was on the cover of both. And I was like, what the hell did I miss?"

His enrollment at UC came by way of an introduction. "My sister Gloria came to school here," Ford says. "She was a year ahead of me. I wasn't really thinking about college, even though Christian Brothers Academy was really a college prep high school. Gloria said, 'Why don't you come visit me up at Utica College? And if you like it, you can come here, and we can travel back and forth together. It would be convenient, I'll introduce you to people.' So I came up to Utica College one weekend with Gloria, and hung out with her and some of her friends, and that was good enough for me."

Ford's intention was to be a journalism student at UC. His father worked at a daily called the Asbury Park Press and Ford had spent much of his high school career as a part-time writer and editor there. He was even managing the Sunday Press for a time, assigning reporters and photographers, watching the wires, and writing and editing front page stories.

When he arrived at UC, though, Ford almost felt as though he had too much experience to benefit from the program. He lost interest in journalism fairly quickly and turned his attention to another pursuit: music.

"That was the other thing that I wanted to do with my life. I wanted to be a professional musician, like we all do when we're that young," says Ford.

He had taken classical piano as a very young man, moving into brass instruments – trombone, baritone horn, and tuba – in high school. But it was watching Chris Squire of the band Yes that set his mind on the bass guitar. "His bass sounded like a bass should sound – out front, loud, cutting edge. I loved it, that's what I was looking for. And so it got me hooked and got me into the kind of music I liked from there," Ford says, that youthful enthusiasm still evident in his voice.

His first "real" band was one he founded at UC with Jimmy Disston, C.V. Abdallah, and Mike Polenski, a rock combination they dubbed NRG. The foursome commandeered their South Hall rooms as a makeshift recording studio / rehearsal space and went to work.

“We had keyboards, recording equipment, drums, and we would literally practice for hours and hours and hours on end. We must have sounded okay, because people didn’t bitch about it and we were always playing. You know, college, band playing next door - that’s never a problem, is it?” says Ford, laughing.

NRG played the UC pub and went farther afield many weekends. It wasn’t a very lucrative venture, but Ford wanted to do it.

“We’d go to Oswego and make like $35 for the weekend, which kind of sucked, but you know, $35 in the 1970s when you’re in college and freaking hungry all the time? I’ll take it, every weekend,” he says.

THE LAST THREE CREDITS

The thing was, playing music took precedence over schoolwork, but Ford found a workable accommodation. He had a simple standard for selecting classes – if it only met perhaps once a week and not too early in the morning, he would take it. “I was a terrible student,” he admits.

At the end of college career, though, he had met – quite accidentally, as he tells it – the academic requirements for a degree in speech communication / dramatic arts. He hadn’t worked toward it, and yet it was as if he had spent four years placing tiles at random and somehow ended up with a Byzantine mosaic. When he left UC in 1978 and started working in legal aid, he was a mere 3-credit elective short of graduating.

It was more than a decade later when Ford attended a function at the College and struck up a conversation with then-President Michael Simpson.

“I said, ‘Hey, Doc! I have 117 credit hours. All the time I was at Utica College, I still haven’t gotten my degree. Isn’t that funny?’ And he looks at me and goes,

‘No, it is not funny.’ He didn’t see the humor in it,” Ford recalls, laughing. “Dr. Simpson said, ‘You’re kidding me, Greeley. You’re a person in the community we look up to. You’re someone we love to say is from Utica College. And you’re telling me you don’t even have your degree yet?’”

Ford says his first thought was, they look up to me? Then the day after his encounter with Simpson, he got a call from then-head of student advising and his one-time RA at South Hall, Stephen Pattarini, now UC’s vice president for student affairs. “Get your ass in here,” Pattarini told him. Ford came in and learned that he needed a single elective to earn his bachelor’s. That was the good news. The not-so-good news?

“It turned out to be a chemistry course, of all things,” says Ford. “And I thought, chemistry? Man ... that’s work!”

But he enrolled in a night course at UC, learned basic chemistry with a roomful of adult students, and actually enjoyed it. “The professor was very cognizant of the fact that we were all working at that point and had other things to do in our lives. He made the class fun, and I passed it and got my degree,” he says.

The best part for Ford was that he was then able to show his degree to both of his parents before they passed away.

“It was worth it just for that,” Ford says. “Now it hangs on the wall in my office. Pretty cool.”

SURVIVING THE DREAM

Music and an eventual degree were not the only things of value Ford found at UC. He also met his first wife, Lynda Myers Ford ’78, whom he lost to cancer in 2007. Lynda was – like Ford – a New Jersey native, as well as a management/human resources professional, author, founder of her own firm, the Ford Group, and the mother of their two sons, Aaron and Daniel.

They married in 1978 upon their departure from the College. Ford worked as a paralegal, but stayed focused on the music business, joining together with other Utica area musicians to form the group Mr. Edd in 1980. “We all got together, maxed out our credit cards to buy a diesel truck and sounds system, then quit our jobs as teachers, paralegals, etc., and resolved to either make it or die,” he recalls.

It would have been a difficult choice for any married person to make, but Lynda was supportive. Consummate professional that she was, she was also adept at providing that center of gravity any road musician needs to keep his or her head screwed on straight. That grounded him through his heady if meteoric Mr. Edd run, through his years with the Todd Hobin band, touring with the Beach Boys and the Kinks, and through his bid for success in the L.A. music scene.

“My aim in California was to get settled in the music business and move the family out there. My mother-in-law gave me about a thousand bucks to get started – in Jewish mother-in-law terms, that means put up or shut up. So I went out there alone and ended up doing some work with some really big names,” he says.

It took a stretch of months before Ford was ready to make a decision on whether or not to build a life out there for his family. In the end, what clinched it for him was basic quality of life considerations. “I mean, they had schools out there with 20-foot fences around them. And I thought, I really don’t want my kids to come out here and grow up like this. So I came back to Utica to reassess,” he says.

In retrospect, he feels fortunate to have gotten out alive.

“The level of party out in LA is like you’ve never seen before,” Ford says. “It’s like the party is always going on, and different people just come and go. It was not the kind of thing I as a married guy would take part in. If I had been single, though, I probably would have been dead in the first nine months.”

Back in Utica, with a growing family to support, he felt he needed a new direction. A career agency counselor suggested he interview at a company called Cellular One, and that suggestion, Ford says, changed his life.

He started out at the ground floor as one of the original eight people in the Utica office, and stayed with it through its transition to Cingular and AT&T, playing a central role in building the company’s wireless network infrastructure in Central New York over the next 24 years, as the industry really came into its own. Ford is now the primary network contact for AT&T upstate, providing solution design and project management to major commercial and institutional customers like GE, MetLife, University of Rochester, Wal-Mart, Welch Allyn, Corning, and many others.

Looking back, Ford now sees his somewhat accidental UC degree as being prophetic. “I’m an engineer with AT&T Mobility, so that’s the ‘speech communication’ part, if you think about it. And ‘dramatic arts’ covers performing with Classified and other bands. Kind of ironic,” he says.

He is now one of the region’s most well-respected wireless communications executives, along with being one of its most highly regarded musicians – a more than ample foundation on which to build a family.

For his own part, Ford is grateful for having had the support of his Classified family through some very troubled times.

“They suffered with me through the loss of my wife Lynda,” he says. “They were strong for me. Thinking about those knuckleheads helped get me through a lot of days. So it was good.”

NEW START

Now, five years later, he has the support of his second wife, Candace, whose first husband, John August – another local musician and a friend of Ford’s – also succumbed to cancer in early 2007. The two couples had been on the same chemotherapy schedule, meeting each Monday at Faxton hospital. “It was almost funny after a while,” he says. “We used to see each other at clubs, now it was chemo. See you next Monday.”

A few months after Lynda and John had passed away, Ford got a call from Candace. “She said, ‘Hey, what are you doing?’” Ford recalls. “I said, ‘Nothing. What are you doing?’ ‘Nothing. Want to get together and do nothing?’ ‘Sure.’”

Ford says now he and his wife get up every day thinking, how long will it be before we get together again and what are we going to do for fun?

“Our experience has caused us to realize how important every hour, every minute of every day is,” he says. “We’re two very blessed people and we freaking know it. A lot of people don’t get one great spouse; we’ve been fortunate enough to have two.”

It is partly for this reason that he is bringing Classified to a close. Management of the group, from booking to contracts to logistics to wrapping up after the gigs, involves an enormous investment of time and energy. “It’s a mega amount of work – details, and schedules, coordinating on every level, with every single person, about every single detail, for every single gig, if you want it to be right, and if you want it to be successful. I just don’t have it in me anymore,” says Ford.

Their performance at Homecoming 2012 was one of their last appearances as a group.

“We’re very close. We have spent some of the best times of our lives together. And I’m going to miss all of them deeply, really deeply. It’s going to hit me hard later when it’s over.”

Caitlin Henry ’12, the band’s most recent addition, shares that sentiment. “Greeley’s one of my favorite people in the world,” she says.

Does this mean full retirement from music for the man from Asbury Park? Not so fast.

“I’m already thinking about another band I might do,” he says. “Hey, we live in a place where you can get up there and do something you love, and people will love it as much as you do. What a great country! So who knows how long my hiatus will last.”

Stay tuned. ■

UC Athletics

Field Hockey Claims Conference Title

UC's field hockey team won the 2012 Empire 8 championship by defeating top-seeded Stevens Institute of Technology in the conference's title game. With the victory, the Pioneers secured a bid to the NCAA Tournament for the second time in program history. UC defeated Endicott College to advance to the Sweet 16.

Pioneers Post Homecoming Shutout

UC's field hockey, men's tennis, football, and men's soccer teams combined for an unbeaten October 13 Homecoming, and did so in extraordinary fashion.

They kept the opponents off the scoreboard.

The field hockey team began the afternoon with an important 1-0 Empire 8 conference victory over St. John Fisher, and men's tennis followed with a 9-0 sweep of Cazenovia. The football team blanked conference Frostburg State, before men's soccer closed the day with a 2-0 victory over Alfred.

Sideline Report

Louise Steele-Norton '15 set new UC single-season field hockey goal- and point-scoring records. Katie Kutas '08 and Danielle Fiore '04 set the previous marks.

Nicole Higgins is the new women's volleyball coach. In her first season on the bench, the former UC assistant coach helped the Pioneers double their win total from 2011. Higgins was a four-year standout player at SUNYIT, where she holds the top four single-season assist marks.

Jeremy Meier '14 ranked among the national leaders in most statistical receiving categories, capturing several individual postseason honors. Meier concludes his football career as UC's all-time leading receiver.

Robert Sherman '74 Appointed NAC President

Robert Sherman '74 has been named president of the Utica College National Alumni Council. The council provides direction to the Alumni Association, which represents all of the College's more than 20,000 alumni worldwide. It further supports and promotes the best interest of Utica College and fosters unity, loyalty and growth within the College community. Sherman began serving a two-year term June 1. He succeeds John Snyder '95.

Sherman has served on the National Alumni Council since 2010. That same year, he retired from Utica National Insurance Group, where he served for 35 years, most recently as senior vice president and senior underwriting officer. He is actively involved in his community, serving on several boards and volunteering with a number of organizations, including Hope House and My Father's House.
