SPECIAL ISSUE | 2010–2011 PRESIDENT'S REPORT

“HOW DO WE ACHIEVE
AS AN INSTITUTION?”

IT STARTS WITH WHAT IMPACT WE HAVE ON LIVES.”

The View from the President's Office

By Todd S. Hutton

"Your participation in Achieve has helped lift Utica
College to a level of excellence it has never seen before."

I hope you will allow me the privilege of opening with this simple but heartfelt sentiment: For everything we have achieved together over the past seven years, thank you.

Because of you, the Achieve: A New Dream, A New Era comprehensive campaign has reached a successful conclusion, raising an impressive total of $34.1 million – far beyond our original $25 million goal, which we considered quite ambitious back when the campaign began.

This inspiring outcome reflects what I have always seen as one of the core strengths of this institution. We see every challenge as an opportunity to reach new heights of achievement, and when we come together as a community, we always exceed expectations.

But as everyone who has traveled with us these past seven years understands, numbers tell only part of the story. Our success can best be measured by the positive impact we have on the lives of our students. And in this respect, the evidence of achievement is all around us.

We see it in the top-level clinical skills our students gain by working in the magnificent new labs in Romano Hall. We see it in the amazing research and learning being done by students and faculty in the Economic Crime, Justice Studies, and Cybersecurity building. We see it in the world-class accomplishments of our Harold T. Clark Jr. Professor of Human Rights Scholarship and Advocacy Ted Orlin, and in those of his successor, Clark Professor of Microbiology Larry Aaronson. The list goes on.

Your participation in Achieve has helped lift Utica College to a level of excellence it has never seen before. That is why this issue of the Pioneer marks not so much the conclusion of a campaign as the commencement of a new era of achievement in the history of this institution. It will be a time of great promise as well as significant challenges, and we have already started the first chapter. Our long-overdue renovation of Gordon Science Center – currently underway – represents yet another opportunity to demonstrate that there is little we cannot do when we do it together.

As we take the next step on this remarkable journey, I am confident that we will continue to define our own destiny – as we have always done – through our abiding commitment to the values upon which UC was founded. I look forward to all we have yet to achieve as a community.

There's a lot to "like."

K. Della Ferguson Womyn's Resource Center Dedicated

Utica College renamed the Womyn's Resource Center in memory of one of its founders, the late Professor Emerita of Psychology and former dean of the School of Health Professions and Education, K. Della Ferguson, at an October 3 ceremony.

Ferguson founded the center in 1990 with current advisor and Dean of Students Alane Varga and former UC professor Traci Fordham-Hernandez.

In addition to her scholarly activity and exemplary teaching and administrative service to Utica College, Ferguson was a tireless advocate for marginalized populations, particularly women and the elderly.

Said UC President Todd S. Hutton, "For more than 20 years, the Womyn's Center has been a place of refuge, comfort, and belongingness. It has nurtured and inspired hundreds of students – both women and men, and has sparked important dialogue on critical yet often times overlooked issues. It has invited and cultivated diversity of background, opinion, and perspective. It has fostered community by opening its door to all comers and provided students both a neighborhood and a living room away from home.

"In short, it represented all that for which Della Ferguson stood."

A tree dedication ceremony and open house accompanied the dedication of the K. Della Ferguson Womyn's Resource Center.

Pack Earns Clark Distinguished Faculty Award

Adam Pack, professor of biology, is the 2011 recipient of the Harold T. Clark Jr. Distinguished Faculty Award. The award was presented to him by Provost and Vice President for Academic Affairs Judith Kirkpatrick during Utica College's August 29 Convocation ceremony.

The Clark Award was established and endowed by Harold T. Clark Jr. '65, the inaugural chair of the Utica College Board of Trustees, to recognize faculty scholarship, professional accomplishment, and potential for excellence.

Pack joined the UC faculty in 2001 after completing his Ph.D. at Upstate Medical University in Syracuse. His research interest is the vestibular and auditory sensory organs in the inner ears of mammals, a topic about which he has authored and presented many publications.

In presenting him for the award, Kirkpatrick commended Pack on being a top researcher in his field. "As a researcher, his work is recognized as groundbreaking and has successfully challenged some of the established assumptions in his research area," she said.

Dale Scalise-Smith Appointed Special Assistant to the President

Dale Scalise-Smith, professor of physical therapy, has been appointed special assistant to the president. She formerly served as dean of the School of Health Professions and Education since 2008.

In her new role, Dr. Scalise-Smith will have oversight for the administrative tasks related to establishing a new accelerated nursing degree program that the College expects to launch next year.

Scalise-Smith joined the Utica College faculty in 1996 from Temple University, where she taught as an assistant professor for five years. She completed her Ph.D. from the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. Over her academic career, she has published a number of chapters and articles, presented at state, national, and international conferences, written several successful grants, held leadership positions with professional organizations, and received a range of honors. She has also been active in the professional field through her involvement with the American Physical Therapy Association and by providing consultation to the local health care community.

UC One of "America's Best Colleges"

Utica College is among the best institutions of its kind in the North, according to U.S. News and World Report.

In its 2012 America's Best Colleges issue, released in September, the magazine ranked UC among the top regional universities in the northern region. This is the fifth consecutive year the College has been ranked in this category. Previously, the College had been ranked in a category of primarily undergraduate colleges in the North.

UC President Todd S. Hutton sees the oft-debated college rankings as a single indication of UC's continuing progress.

"It's difficult not to be pleased and proud when we have been recognized by our peers for excellence," he says. "There are many ways to measure an institution's value, and the U.S. News and World Report's Best Colleges ranking system is perhaps the most widely recognized. Until recently, we were included in the Regional Colleges category, and we are now competing with much larger schools with far more resources than we have. So in some measure, the ranking is an affirmation that we are achieving our goals, particularly those having to do with building our reputation.

"That being said, there are some who say that the rankings are nothing more than a popularity contest, one that misleads students and parents with confusing and irrelevant data. In many ways, I agree with those criticisms. As a result, while it's certainly nice to be noticed, I prefer to look at the rankings as just one small indication of the amazing work we are doing at Utica College."

Board of Trustees Welcome New Members

Five new members of the Utica College Board of Trustees began their terms earlier this year.

The Honorable Bernadette Clark is an Oneida County Supreme Court Justice. She previously served as Oneida County Family Court Judge from 2001 to 2005, as first assistant district attorney in the Oneida County District Attorney's Office from 1994 to 2000, as a trial attorney with the Utica law firm Petrone and Petrone from 1992 to 1993, and as a labor and litigation attorney with Bond, Schoeneck and King in Syracuse from 1989 to 1992. She earned her bachelor's degree from St. Mary's College of Notre Dame and her J.D. from Syracuse University. She and her husband, Harold T. Clark Jr. '65, live in Utica.

Heidi Hoeller '91 is an audit partner at PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP in Boston, specializing in the insurance industry. She is a native of Utica and earned her bachelor's degree in accounting at UC. She now resides in Medway, MA with her husband, Paul Serbaniewicz, also a native of Utica, and volunteers with Big Brothers, Big Sisters.

Ron Mason '74 is vice president for human resources at Quinnipiac University. He previously served as chief administrative and human resources officer at Planned Parenthood Federation of America, and held the top human resources executive position for the world's third largest ad agency, BBDO Worldwide in New York City. He has also served as director of the Higher Educational Opportunity Program at Fordham University, coordinator of student services and affirmative action officer at the State University of New York Educational Opportunity Center, and a faculty member of the Cornell School of Industrial and Labor Relations in New York City. He earned his bachelor's degree in psychology from Utica College and a master's in education from City College of New York. He has served on the boards of the American Red Cross-Rockland County Chapter, the New York Urban League, the Volunteer Counseling Service of Rockland County, and STAR kids.

Russ Petralia is president of Ashford Management Group Inc., a real estate investment firm that specializes in acquisition, management, and development of commercial real estate in the Northeast and Midwest. He is a graduate of SUNY Brockport. A previous member of the Board of Trustees, he is married to trustee Linda Romano, and they have a daughter, Whitney.

John Snyder '95 is a partner in Gitto and Niefer LLP, and is the secretary of the New York State Bar Association Workers' Compensation Division and an executive committee member for the Torts, Insurance, and Compensation Law Section of the State Bar Association. He earned his bachelor's degree in political science from UC, and currently serves as president of the Utica College National Alumni Council. He and wife, Renee, have four children, Sarah, Robert, Caitlin, and Donald.

In addition, the Board of Trustees named Lawrence Gilroy as chairperson. Gilroy, president of Gilroy, Kernan, and Gilroy Insurance, will serve a three-year term.

Renovated Biology Lab Named for Jim '59 and Kitti Pyne

Utica College dedicated the James '59 and Katherine Pyne General Biology Laboratory at a September 9 ceremony.

The renovation of the general biology laboratory represents the rebirth of Gordon Science Center, a core fundraising priority of the College. Along with the recently renovated Chemistry Research Laboratory, it is the first in a series of renovation projects planned for 45-year-old building over the next several years.

"This work is a long-time coming," President Todd S. Hutton said of the initiative, "but it will be worth the effort. When we're done, our campus will boast a science center that is worthy of the extraordinary caliber of work that has taken place within its walls over the past many decades.

"We have several people to thank for bringing this vision into focus; however, at the top of that list are Jim and Kitti Pyne."

The Pynes have been stalwart supporters of Utica College for many years, both through their generous financial support and their active participation in its governance. As a former member of the Board of Trustees, Kitti Pyne helped guide the College through its fledgling years as an independent institution. She was a major donor to the College's Achieve: A New Dream, A

New Era campaign, and was a former regional chair for the previous campaign.

Jim, her late husband, was likewise a remarkable ambassador for the College. Further, he is remembered as a pillar of the Utica-area business community and a deeply caring citizen. He founded REMET in California and relocated the company to Utica. In addition to their support of Utica College and many other local organizations, he and Kitti were central to the effort to establish the Mohawk Valley Heart Institute and St. Elizabeth Medical Center.

School of Health Professions and Education

Richard Rafes Appointed Interim Dean

Richard Rafes has been appointed interim dean of the School of Health Professions and Education.

Rafes will provide administrative leadership to the school's undergraduate and graduate programs. As well, he will work with Provost and Vice President for Academic Affairs Judith Kirkpatrick, other academic administrators, and faculty on the development of new programs and initiatives, and will oversee the faculty appointment, promotion, and tenure processes within the school.

Rafes brings to Utica College more than 30 years of experience in higher education. He served as senior vice president for administration and general counsel at the University of North Texas for 25 years, and later as president of East Central University in Oklahoma and the West Virginia School of Osteopathic Medicine.

Most recently, he was the special assistant and policy advisor to the chancellor of the West Virginia Higher Education Policy Commission.

Rafes earned a J.D. from the University of Houston, a Ph.D. in higher education administration from the University of North Texas, and a bachelor's degree in government from Lamar University.

UTICA COLLEGE

The close of Utica College's comprehensive campaign is not an ending, but a beginning – the formal launch of the new era it challenged us to bring forth ... and an occasion to reflect upon all that has been

ACHIEVED

It's been a long, storied journey. And after seven years of determined effort on the part of the entire Utica College community, the Achieve: A New Dream, A New Era comprehensive campaign has reached a very successful conclusion. You can see success in the numbers: Achieve brought in a total of $34.1 million in support of its four priorities, exceeding the campaign goal by more than $9 million. You can see it in the dramatic expansion of UC's physical plant, with the addition of two major academic buildings and high-tech facilities elsewhere on campus.

But the campaign's success can best be measured in human terms. "How do we achieve as an institution?" President Todd S. Hutton asked in 2007 as the effort began in earnest. "It starts with what impact we make on lives."

It seems only appropriate, then, that we should celebrate the start of UC's new era by looking at some of those who helped make it possible.

THE POWER OF IDEAS

Larry Aaronson, Ph.D.

The Harold T. Clark Jr. Professorship

Before he received it, he was an academic powerhouse at UC. Now Larry Aaronson, Harold T. Clark Jr. Professor of Microbiology, can reasonably be described as a powerhouse on steroids.

This is the practical magic of the Harold T. Clark Jr. Professorship, the supported faculty position at UC that is one of the groundbreaking outcomes of the Achieve campaign. The two professors chosen in succession for this honor – Aaronson and his predecessor, Professor Ted Orlin – were both enormously accomplished scholars and educators prior to their appointments. The Clark Professorship provided them with the resources, in time and treasure, to greatly enhance and extend their ability to do what they had already been doing so well.

"During its first five-year term, the Clark Professorship gave Ted Orlin the resources he needed to do the important work he has been doing in human rights," says John Johnsen, Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences. "Now the professorship has been awarded to Larry Aaronson, who will do us proud as well. He has great ideas that need the resources to bring them to fruition."

Himself a former Dean of Arts and Sciences and among the busiest of UC's notoriously busy faculty, Aaronson had not expected to be considered for the post.

"It came about sort of by surprise. Over the summer of 2010 I received a letter from President Hutton telling me I had been one of a small group selected to apply for the Clark Professorship. So I put together my proposal," he says.

He considers his appointment a great honor. But Aaronson is more impressed by what the award says about the UC faculty in general as opposed to what it says about him as an individual. He sees the establishment of the Clark Professorship as a major milestone in the recognition of faculty achievement at Utica College.

"As a faculty member who's served on promotion and tenure committees, as a former dean, I've seen a lot of the outstanding research that faculty here do, some involving our undergraduates, some involving graduate students, some in collaboration with our colleagues at other institutions," says Aaronson. "The fact that the Clark professorship recognizes outstanding achievement in research at a primarily undergraduate college is a tremendous asset to us."

THREE KEY COMPONENTS

His plan for the five-year appointment includes three major components. First among these is professional development training in the area of bioinformatics and genomics.

"They are very vital aspects of modern biology, and currently no one in our department has real expertise in these areas. We all sort of dabble, but none of us has had formal training in bioinformatics or genomics. My plan is to go out and get that training through several institutes and workshops. This is a necessary tool for my own research toolbox, given the type of work we've been doing, but it's critical for our program as well. I'm going to bring this expertise back to our department, share it with my colleagues, and incorporate it into our curriculum at every level from general biology all the way up to our graduate courses. It will enable our students to be more competitive in the job market and in applying to graduate and professional schools," he says.

The other two components of his plan involve the extension and enhancement of work Aaronson has been engaged in since long before receiving the Clark Professorship. One focuses on the kind of collaborative research he has been doing with his students for the past quarter century – work that has gained momentum since his team's discovery last year of a previously undescribed microorganism that will soon carry the appellation Pseudomonas uticaensis, after Utica.

"We're embarking upon two brand new research projects that involve study of signaling pathways in different species of bacteria. This is groundbreaking research that involves undergraduates. Some of this work has already been presented in preliminary form at national meetings by some of our undergraduates, and I'm really excited to have the resources to follow up on that research," says Aaronson.

The third component is perhaps the most ambitious of the three. "This is the part of my program I'm most excited about," says Aaronson. "It's something I call Project GERM, where GERM is an acronym for General Education Regarding Microbes. It's a community outreach program that I've developed that will eventually reach out to all aspects of the local and possibly national community."

The pilot phase of Project GERM will involve Aaronson and his students and former students working with local middle and high school classes, bringing his expertise in microbiology to the students, developing curriculum with the faculty, carrying out experiments in their classrooms, and providing resources to continue the project after the pilot phase is over.

"I have a strong interest in educating the community about the microbial world – not just the dangerous microbes that cause disease, but also the importance of microbes in the environment and in our lives," he says. "We'll be involving alumni and some current students in biology and other sciences. It's a good opportunity to introduce students to the possibilities of a teaching career, as well."

"THE PUREST FORM OF EDUCATION"

The fact that there is a mentoring component to Project GERM is not surprising. Aaronson's greatest passion has always been for teaching – a fact underscored by the many students he has worked with over the years, many of whom refer to him simply as "Doc."

"When I think back to the days of being in that lab I am reminded of the amazing experiences that I had. One of Doc's mantras is involvement, and as an undergraduate I became immersed completely within the field of microbiology. My former classmates and I often talk about how demanding it was, as most research is, but the skills that we gained from that experience prepared us for the next level. His mentorship inspires scientific inquiry, cultivates enthusiasm about discovery, and provides everyone with the tools for success," says Scott Britton '07, Microbiologist and QA/QC Manager at Duvel Moortgat USA and alumnus of UC's biology program.

Biology alumni frequently describe their interaction with him as the most valued part of their educational experience. "I'm really proud to be a part of that," Aaronson says. "I came to Utica College to be a mentor. That is the way I was brought up in my education, working closely with my professors and getting one-on-one instruction. It's the purest form of education."

Aaronson strongly believes that investment in higher education – both in terms of financial support and mentorship – offers real, tangible benefits to society.

"You're investing in the future. Many of the students in the sciences are going to become the health care professionals of the future. These students have been supported by the generosity of people who have contributed to facilities and scholarships and endowed professorships," he says. ■

GATEWAY TO SUCCESS

Nisla Pryce '12

F. Eugene Romano Hall

Like the hospital wards it's designed to emulate, the Albert and Gloria Shaheen Nursing Laboratory conforms to nothing that could be described as normal business hours. It's an especially busy corner of a facility that has seen a lot of activity in the four years since it was put into service.

F. Eugene Romano Hall – a grand monument to the Achieve campaign and the first major academic facility erected on campus since the 1960s – has lived up to its promise of being a dynamic center of learning at the College. A primary beneficiary of this success has been UC's rapidly growing nursing program, which is now supported by an innovative clinical laboratory that has served as a model for other institutions across the country.

"Even when there's no class, we're in there practicing our skills, sometimes until all hours of the night," says nursing major and Gates Millennium Scholar Nisla Pryce '12.

Pryce was among the first cohorts of students to make use of the new facility. And academically, she is as much of a standout as is the nursing lab where she spends much of her time. Only about 1,000 college-bound students are chosen for a Gates Millennium Scholarship each year. Pryce is one of them, and the only Gates Scholar currently at UC.

Established by the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation to promote opportunity for academically outstanding minority students with significant financial need, the scholarship is a generous one, providing renewable support to promising individuals in certain disciplines throughout their undergraduate and graduate careers.

Pryce was encouraged by several mentors at her high school to apply for the Gates Millennium Scholarship. She was examining her options for financial aid. "My brother is two years older than I am. I knew we were going to be in college at the same time, and I couldn't put that burden on my father and mother, so I applied for the scholarship," she says.

The award covers the recipient's cost of attendance over and above what is provided through financial aid. Like any Gates Millennium Scholar, Pryce could have chosen virtually any institution, private or public. The fact that UC was even on her radar – let alone her first choice – indicates the degree to which the state-of-the-art clinical lab has raised the nursing program's profile.

A CHALLENGING PROGRAM

Her first experience at UC was at the invitation of the College's Director of Opportunity Programs Johnni Mahdi, who suggested Nisla sign up for the Collegiate Science and Technology Entry Program (CSTEP) five-week Summer Institute. "She said, 'We really want you to come to our program.' So I came and it was fun. I met a lot of new people, and I liked that UC was small enough so that if I need to talk to a professor, I can find him or her," says Pryce.

The nursing program proved a challenge, however, even for a Gates Scholar.

"It's intense. But you learn so much. A lot of our professors are still nurses, and they expect a lot. Junior year is when you start to feel the pressure, when you start to learn the real meat and potatoes of what you need for your foundation. It's not textbook at that point. Making it through that first semester is the hardest thing I've ever experienced," Pryce says.

Her grades have been solid, and she has spent several semesters on the dean's list. She credits her success to the rigor of her program and the degree to which it inspires her to reach beyond her comfort level. "I don't think there are any 'natural' nurses. Nobody just reads a book then goes out into a clinical setting and knows exactly how to do it. You need to be challenged, and I've had some incredibly challenging classes both inside and outside of nursing," she says.

"THE SPACE IS GREAT"

Pryce, like all nursing students above the sophomore level, has spent many hours in the lab developing her medical-surgical nursing skills, working with the advanced technologies it offers, such as the patient simulators – sophisticated programmable manikins that respond to treatments, display vital signs, and even speak. This is where the facility truly demonstrates its value.

"The space is great," she says. "It's a great learning environment. Of course, nothing takes the place of human contact, but it's as close a simulation as you can get. We are required to work two hours a week in the lab practicing our skills, but we all spend at least 15 hours a week there outside of class, because that's what it takes to get to the point where you're comfortable actually providing care."

"The nursing lab has created for us an incredibly realistic and useable simulation space for teaching students not only nursing theory but nursing skills," says Catherine Brownell, Ph.D., associate professor and chair of nursing at UC. "It features all the same equipment that you can find on any hospital floor. Once the students are comfortable with how to use the equipment here, they can translate that into clinical practice with minimal orientation."

The lab has become a gathering place for students, according to Brownell, serving as a center of social activity somewhat like the first floor of Gordon Science Center does for biology students. "On any given afternoon this lab is filled with the sophomore, junior, and senior students, conferring on things, practicing on the manikins, going over their skills, looking up information, doing group work at the conference table. So it's given them a home and they use it very well," Brownell says.

"I know that when I leave here I'm going to be good at what I do because I got exposed to it through great teaching and great facilities."

It's a dynamic that facilitates mutual support among the students – a particularly valuable asset in the context of so demanding a discipline.

"There's a good sense of community," says Pryce. "There are always personality clashes, particularly given the great lengths of time we spend together, but it's a supportive group."

TOOLS FOR SUCCESS

A senior this year, her thoughts are on what comes next. Pryce is bound for graduate school – her top three list includes Johns Hopkins, Georgetown, and NYU – with plans for becoming a nurse practitioner and, perhaps, an educator at the collegiate level or an administrator.

"I can see myself being a leader in the field, but at the same time, I want to remain hands-on and treating patients. I did an summer internship at Lenox Hill Hospital and I loved being on the medical-surgical floor. But I also want to do critical care. I want to save people," Pryce says.

These ambitions are, of course, buoyed by renewable support from the Gates Scholarship, but what truly propels her forward is the sense of confidence she has gained within the walls of Romano Hall.

"When I'm done here, I'm going to be a good nurse because I have these professors who are giving me all the tools I need to be successful and to provide great care. I know that when I leave here I'm going to be good at what I do because I got exposed to it through great teaching and great facilities. I don't question any part of my decision to come here," Pryce says. ■

RAISING THE PROFILE

Professors Joseph Giordano and Jennifer Trost

Economic Crime, Justice Studies, and Cybersecurity Building

Great teaching doesn't require great facilities. But having both can make a great program truly extraordinary. That, according to Assistant Professor of Criminal Justice Joseph Giordano, is what the Economic Crime, Justice Studies, and Cybersecurity Building has done for the suite of programs it houses.

"We have a dedicated faculty here," says Giordano. "We would teach out on the lawn if we had to. But with the ECJSC building, there are no longer so many limitations to work around. The faculty can instruct our students more effectively with far fewer distractions. And the students love it."

John Johnsen, Dean of Arts and Sciences and former Dean of Business and Justice Studies, agrees that the ECJSC building – like the other new facilities that rose out of the Achieve campaign – plays a key role in facilitating the advanced level of learning UC has always striven to provide.

"Our faculty is probably without peer in terms of being able to deliver a very high quality educational program, sometimes with baling wire and things held together with toothpaste and other kinds of make-do situations. And we've done a good job at that. But to cross the threshold into state-of-the-art teaching facilities and research facilities has made an enormous difference to the faculty as well as the students," he says.

"It's just a wonderful place to teach and to learn," Giordano says.

A LOCUS FOR LEARNING

One of the primary benefits of the building, according to Giordano, is the fact that it offers a dedicated – and appropriately high-tech – space for UC's respected economic crime/cybersecurity suite of programs. Before the facility was completed in early 2009, classes and residencies within these programs were held at various locations across campus. ECJSC is now the central locus for learning and research within these disciplines, offering students and faculty rich opportunities for collaborative work in state-of-the-art laboratories and classrooms.

"The computers in ECJSC are staged for forensics projects. Students don't have to run all over the campus to find an open computer and then worry about whether they can do a cybersecurity project on a library computer or a generic lab computer. We now have the technology to support them, with computers specialized for what the students need to do. That enhances the learning process," Giordano says.

The building's labs offer advanced hardware and software that give students a real-world introduction to crime prevention and detection on a very sophisticated level.

"These are not just academic tools. They are in fact the technologies that professionals who are currently doing this work use and in which our students become proficient before they graduate from our programs," says Jennifer Trost, associate professor of criminal justice and executive director of economic crime and justice studies at UC.

By virtue of its distinctive design and highly specialized features, the ECJSC building also helps to raise Utica College's profile in the economic crime and cybersecurity fields, providing a world-class platform for institutional research of the type that has been conducted at UC for many years. Among the building's permanent residents are Utica College's Economic Crime Institute (ECI), the Center for Identity Management and Information Protection (CIMIP), and the Computer Forensics Research and Development Center (CFRDC), all of which make use of the forensic labs and secure evidence facilities.

The facility and its resources are also used by law enforcement professionals at the local, regional, and national level on a regular basis.

"We have a number of law enforcement agencies, both local and federal, who use the facilities in the building. These include the U.S. Secret Service, the U.S. Postal Inspection Service, the Child Advocacy Center, as well as area prosecutors and police departments," Trost says.

Giordano adds that businesses also use the building, both as a resource for the development of loss prevention "best practices" and as a location for corporate gatherings. "Utica National Insurance uses the facilities and First Source Federal Credit Union has held seminars here," he says. "Aside from that, faculty and students from other disciplines are here frequently for classes and conferences. It's an active, vibrant place, and the atmosphere is very positive."

The fact that the facilities are so broadly used contributes to the core educational mission of the ECJSC building.

"What's really nice about this is that our students are exposed to law enforcement professionals and often work collaboratively with them. That helps students see potential career outcomes for themselves," says Trost.

BUILDING A STRONG REPUTATION

Prior to the construction of the ECJSC building, residencies for UC's online master's programs were held at various locations across campus. Graduate classes in economic crime management, cybersecurity, and related disciplines were in some ways limited by the physical and technological constraints of the more general purpose classrooms in Hubbard Hall.

"Back when I started in 2003, classes were all lecture-based and case study-based. We would need to wheel in a smart cart to set-up a presentation. Now you just walk into a smart classroom in ECJSC, pop in a thumb drive, and the presentation is ready to go. Students bring their laptops, and they plug in and take notes. You might point them to a Web site to download an application and they're able to do it in the snap of a finger. Just a short time ago, you would never have imagined it would be possible. Now we're doing it on a day-to-day basis," says Giordano.

While graduate students attending the residencies have always been impressed by the quality and caliber of the faculty and their fellow students, they are now equally impressed with the location. "Many of them are not expecting as much as they get when they come here," says Trost. "When we take them through the secured facilities, they're just absolutely enthralled with what we show them, and it makes them feel even more confident that they've made the right choice to come to this program at this school."

But the benefits go beyond making a good impression. Trost argues that holding the residencies at ECJSC actually builds loyalty to the program and builds upon UC's reputation in an increasingly complex online learning marketplace.

"We know that students are more loyal to programs when they can see the place that they're attached to. Coming here shows students that this is a place that actually does exist – that we are a traditional college that has online programs," she says.

"Our programs get a lot of national attention and publicity. This building and the facilities inside the building – the labs, the classrooms, the auditorium – just enhance that," says Giordano. ■

PUNCHING THE TICKET TO THE MOTHER SHIP

Wes Allen '10

Professor Raymond Simon Convergence Media Center

For a SportsCenter fan since age seven, this was like the ultimate highlight reel. Wes Allen's star-studded first day at ESPN's Bristol, CT campus featured encounters with John Buccigross, Stuart Scott, Erin Andrews, Herm Edwards, and other denizens of sports television's "Mother Ship" he'd idolized for many years. Only now, they were not just his heroes; they were his co-workers as well.

"I think I was just star-struck by everything. Just walking through the facility, going into the SportsCenter studio, and seeing these anchors I've watched my entire life stop to say hi to me and have a conversation. That was just an unbelievable day," says Allen.

But in the fast-paced world of sports media production – no surprise – the novelty wears off quickly. "That star-struck feeling leaves you pretty fast when you have to work with these people and there are standards and expectations that you have to uphold," he says.

Allen scored his position in the editorial department at ESPN this past June through dogged persistence, tracking down a recruiter on Twitter, talking to all the right people, and ultimately getting the call to audition. It was at this point that his many hours of work at editing consoles in the Simon Convergence Media Center – a state-of-the-art facility funded by the Achieve campaign – really began to pay off.

"My preparation at UC in non-linear video editing definitely helped me out. I wouldn't be as comfortable as I am now if it wasn't for that. Professor [of Journalism David] Chanatry helped me out a lot, and I have him to thank and UC for the bringing all the pieces together to allow me to be where I'm at right now," says Allen.

BASIC TRAINING

Dedicated to the legendary Ray Simon, emeritus professor of public relations and founder of UC's public relations and journalism programs, the Simon Convergence Media Center offers a fully appointed high-definition broadcast studio, a video editing suite, and a smart classroom equipped with web-networked multimedia workstations.

"What the Simon Media Center does is that it allows us to do what we've always done – teach the eternal verities of accuracy and fairness – and combine that with the skill set that young journalists need today," Chanatry says.

"I love the facility," says Allen, who came to UC originally as a communications arts major and transitioned to the journalism program with the broadcast concentration. "I spent a lot of time down there. I mean, Final Cut Pro became my best friend."

Allen took UC's Sportscasting class in his junior year, helping to produce the program Chanatry jokingly refers to as "ESPN minor" – a television sports-cast shot on the Simon Center newsroom set and out on location. As a senior, Allen worked on sports highlights packages, learning how to do standups, set up the lighting, do the interview, and pull the whole piece together by himself. "We had to be a one-man band, basically," Allen recalls. "I did a whole package on America's Greatest Heart Run and Walk, which was pretty cool. A lot of things that I did at the Simon Center I'm applying every day."

His work on UC sportscasts was good basic training for the daily front-line battle that is the 24-hour sports news cycle. Allen quickly discovered that his job at ESPN was really all about skill and creativity under the pressure of daily deadlines.

"Some days, I go in to work at 4:30 p.m. and do just highlights. I might check the rundown of all the day's shows, see what games I'll be covering, then do preparation to cut the highlight later on. We have a highlight meeting around 6:00 p.m., and everyone who is doing a game that night discusses ideas with the highlight supervisors. Then I watch the game and log every play. In a perfect world I'm able to get through the entire game and then work with the editor, but eight times out of 10 that doesn't happen," he says.

The goal is maximum impact on the viewer. "The big thing at ESPN is you have to make a memorable highlight. You have to make it stand out and pop so that people can remember it. You've got to find the interesting stat or something that the viewer did not know," says Allen.

THE "SMALL-SCHOOL" GUY

For a UC alumnus to find himself working elbow-to-elbow with graduates of larger, more prestigious institutions is not unusual. It is, however, a source of surprise among these co-workers that the "small-school guy" is more than keeping pace with them.

"I'm like the non-BCS school coming to crash the party at the national championship," Allen says. "Most people here are from UCLA, Texas, Kansas, the bigger schools. But I'm right with them in terms of the preparation I received and probably a little ahead of some of the recent hires who have been there even longer than I have."

"The Simon Center has brought us into the forefront of journalism programs because we have the technological facilities that make a lot of today's journalism possible," says Chanatry. "Students have access to the high-definition broadcast studio and control room, the video editing suite, news footage from CNN so that they can learn how to assemble a package, and the Web technology to pull it all together. It's a great learning experience for them."

Himself a seasoned broadcast news journalist/producer, Chanatry has always been a firm believer in learning by doing. Allen sees this approach – along with the capabilities offered by the Simon Media Center – as being crucial to his own success at the "Mother Ship."

"The best knowledge is hands-on knowledge. That's particularly the case with broadcast journalism. You can't just talk about it; you have to actually do it. At a bigger school you won't necessarily get the intimacy of talking to your professor the way I was able to talk to Professor Chanatry about my work and learn what was right, what was wrong, and what can I do better. He had me work every position, from producer to anchor to standups for some of the packages, doing writing, interviewing, camera, and lighting. I've definitely benefited from all of that hands-on learning," he says.

"I'm like the non-BCS school coming to crash the party at the national championship. Most people here are from UCLA, Texas, Kansas, the bigger schools. But I'm right with them in terms of the preparation I received and probably a little ahead of some of the recent hires."

And though he's no longer the star-struck neophyte he was on that first day, he gets a real thrill out of the kind of work he's doing at ESPN. "Just yesterday I cut a Red Sox-Yankees highlight. It was probably the biggest baseball game of the day, and it was my first Yankees game, so that was pretty cool. A few weeks ago I did the Texas-UCLA game. I did a really good job with that," says Allen. "Life is great." ■

DIALING FOR A DIFFERENCE

Cristina Picozzi '11 The Annual Fund

It was a happy – if somewhat hard – landing. Cristina Picozzi had just finished her most successful Phonathon call ever and, blinded by jubilation, she took a tumble.

"I called this woman who graduated three or four years ago," the recent public relations graduate recalls. "And she said, 'Oh, I've been meaning to donate. I'm going to give you five hundred dollars. Here's my credit card number.' I was like, 'You're serious, right?' And she said, 'Yeah, unless you don't want my money.' And I was like, 'No, no, that's great.' I wrote down her information as fast as I could. Then I hung up with her, and I started screaming and running. I was so excited, I tripped up the stairs."

The fall did little to dampen her enthusiasm for fundraising, a vocation she discovered as one of the many students who worked the Phonathon during

"The Achieve campaign was all about growth and community and relationship building and getting people involved."

UC's Achieve campaign. All of those hours talking to alumni and friends of the College made her want to explore development as a career option.

"It's awesome. You can tell the staff love it so much – that it's more than an occupation. I think the best part is the relationship-building, talking to alumni about how much they loved it here, or with parents about how much their children are enjoying it here, or even with people who have no connection to the College, but just think that education is important and that Utica College is great, so they are donating to the campaign," Picozzi says.

Not that there aren't challenging moments from time to time. "I've gotten hung up on. Who doesn't? I've hung up on telemarketers myself. But I've never really had an awful call. I've never had the problem of someone saying to me, 'I can't believe you're calling me for this,'" she says.

The rewards always far outweighed the disappointments. There was just something about this kind of work that appealed to her. Picozzi has a deeply competitive nature, and she thrives on goals and deadlines – qualities that will serve her well in the public relations field. This became the source of some very productive competition around the Phonathon table while she was on duty.

"We would have competitions to see who could raise the most money in a single night. That's really what made me raise a lot of money for Phonathon. I ended up raising about 10 percent of the total brought in by the program, and I got about 300 donors," Picozzi says.

SOMETHING LARGER

She found the challenge invigorating and her ability to exceed expectations highly gratifying. "You tell me to do something, and I'm going to do it better than you asked. That's just how I am," she says. That drive to achieve can, for some, eclipse all other considerations. But Picozzi always knew exactly why she was working those phones and why it was important.

"It's about renovating 40-year-old science laboratories. It's about students who otherwise wouldn't be able to come here getting scholarships. The Achieve campaign was all about growth and community and relationship building and getting people involved. That's very important. At the same time, you see more needs around you, and it's easy to think of where we could go if we could just raise more money. But seeing what this campaign has done makes you feel that you're a part of something larger," says Picozzi.

These judgments about the value of giving she applies to herself as well. "When I get the call, I will donate," Picozzi says. "Even if it's five dollars. The Annual Fund is important because it goes to everything the College needs it to be used for. What happens if something goes wrong with a building and we need money for a repair? Where is that money going to come from? It comes from the Annual Fund."

But for her, the most enjoyable part of Phonathon work was hearing about people's experiences at the College years and even decades before she arrived on campus.

"I talked to people who loved it here, and that's why they were giving back. It's kind of like that idea of pay it forward: you had a good experience; you want somebody else to have that experience. For me it was great hearing that Utica College was such a valuable and meaningful part of their life and that they had a great time here. It makes you proud to be a student at UC and it reaffirms your sense of why you came here in the first place," says Picozzi.

They do not tend to be one-way conversations, however. Very often she encounters people who like to hear from her what's new at the College. "For someone who hasn't maybe been back in 10 years, it's exciting for them to get the call and hear about all of the positive things that have happened on campus," she says. "I've had great conversations about UC with people who couldn't make a gift."

A PERSONAL THANK YOU

As someone who has relied on scholarship aid during her time at UC, Picozzi feels that her participation in itself brings home for people the importance of giving.

"I think it really helps to have students calling. It kind of makes it more real that the money is important, that their gifts help students like me who put themselves through college and who need the extra help," she says.

Working the phones is also her way of paying it forward ... and giving back. "The merit scholarships I benefitted from were funded and endowed by alumni and friends of the College. At the time, somebody thought my education was important enough to put money toward that scholarship. I really wish I could have thanked them personally, and I guess in a way, this is a way I can thank them – by raising money so that others can benefit," says Picozzi. ■

ACHIEVE

A NEW DREAM | A NEW ERA

UTICA COLLEGE

June 1, 2010– May 31, 2011
President's Report

The Achieve: A New Dream, A New Era Campaign is now concluded, and I am happy to report that we have exceeded our goal by a substantial margin.

As of the official close of the campaign, the final tally is $34.1 million. That is more than $9 million above our original goal of $25 million. It is an outcome of which we can all be very proud.

I want to take this opportunity to thank everyone who has participated in the Achieve campaign over the past seven years. I also want to thank my colleagues on the Board of Trustees for their unwavering support, and the entire Advancement team for the work they have done on the College's behalf.

It has been an enormous honor to serve as Chair of the Achieve campaign and a great pleasure to have the opportunity to meet so many members of the UC Community. Like the final tally, the experience has exceeded all expectations, and I am sincerely grateful.

Thank you all for making Achieve such a remarkable success.

Retiring Athletic Director Jim Spartano
reflects on three decades of putting students first.

He was the natural athlete type, unaccustomed to the struggles he was encountering at the plate, namely a recent 0-for-15 skid during a road trip down south. A senior and a self-critical team captain, he had pressured himself into believing the fallacy that his grip on the starting second-base job was suddenly loosening.

Back home against in-state rival Binghamton University, he sought and earned redemption in the form of three hits in his first four at-bats. In his final trip to the plate, he laced a pitch deep into the outfield grass and showcased the speed that would ultimately help him sit atop of SUNY Oneonta's all-time stolen base list. He raced into third base for a triple – his box score-pleasing 4-for-5 performance complete, and, he imagined, his coach's and teammates' faith in him restored.

He looked up, and watched a Binghamton player toss the ball to second base on appeal before the umpire flashed the out sign, ruling that his foot missed second base while racing to third. He fired his batting helmet into the infield dirt, and stormed toward the umpire, pointing aggressively as the umpire ejected him from the game.

Still incensed and still attracting attention to himself, the player passed by his head coach, Don Axtell, a legendarily gentle and mild-mannered man, and reluctantly left the field.

Axtell had remained stationed within the lines of the third base coach's box as his player confronted the umpire, deliberately choosing to observe from afar rather than possibly prevent his team captain's ejection. Instead, he casually picked up the player's discarded helmet and walked it to him in the dugout. In his usual calm and collected manner, the coach placed his hand on the indignant player's shoulder and said, "Jim, you can't play for us and do that; you can't embarrass yourself or the team. It's unacceptable. We'll talk later."

It was the moment that sparked in Jim Spartano a commitment to the values of college sport, the principles of team play, and respect for the game and those who are a part of it – a commitment that has never wavered over his 38-year career as a coach, administrator, and mentor in college athletics.

"I had stumbled over the bag, so I know I didn't miss it. Coach had a clear view of the play; he knew it too," Spartano, Utica College's long-time athletic director, recounts some 40 years later. "But he saw the bigger picture, a picture I couldn't see.

"I'll never forget this," he continues. "He never came out (to argue). He let me act like a jerk out there, and get thrown out. I bought into him early on, so the embarrassment for me was that I disappointed him. While I was sitting in the dugout, I wasn't thinking about the play or even about the game at all. All I was thinking was, 'How would I let that guy down?' I wanted to cry. I embarrassed myself, I embarrassed him, and I embarrassed my team – and for what? It never happened again, and I made sure none of my players did that."

It is from this fabric of guidance and experience that Jim "Doc" Spartano crafted an athletic department at Utica College that is highly regarded by fellow athletic directors, coaches, and college presidents across the country – not for the number of championship banners hanging from the rafters, but for the integrity with which its teams compete.

"I think an outsider looks at Utica College athletics today and sees a program that is very highly competitive and has had a great deal of success, but it's one where character matters first," says UC women's hockey coach Dave Clausen. "When you talk to coaches at other schools, the first thing we always hear is, 'Wow, Utica College is one of the classiest programs we compete against as far as sportsmanship, treatment of visiting teams, or voting and acting in different league manners with a mindset of what's in the best interest of everyone involved.' It says a lot that Jim's influence has resonated not only throughout our department, but throughout Division III athletics."

END OF AN ERA

Spartano will retire from his athletic director post later this month. "I've been thinking about this over the past year. I just know it's time. You get a feeling; you just know when it's time to move on," he says.

The decision closes the book on a remarkable career that was diverse in spectrum and function, but single in its focus.

In his 29 years as athletic director, the athletic department has grown tremendously, now supporting 25 intercollegiate sports – including 13 new sports since 2000, more than 50 coaches and administrative staff members, and 640 student-athletes. Participation in intramural and club sports has increased by more than 150 percent. He has overseen a significant expansion in facilities, including the construction of Charles A. Gaetano Stadium, Harold T. Clark Sr. Team Facility, Gary M. Kunath Fitness Center, and the hockey facility at the Utica Memorial Auditorium. He has been a driving force behind the Empire 8 Conference's nationally-recognized sportsmanship initiatives, and he has been among the most fervent ambassadors of the Division III philosophy and values.

Further, he has been a mentor to thousands of students – both athletes and non-athletes – as well as hundreds of coaches. It is this role about which he is most passionate. “Our students need to feel this is their college,” Spartano says. “They need to feel a sense of pride, confidence, and success, and it’s our job to make them feel that. It’s our job to embrace and nurture that and to mentor them.

“Our coaches get it,” he continues. “It’s not about us. Our students are why we’re here. It’s their time to get their names in the paper. It’s their time to shine. You have to remember that, even though at times that’s hard to do. Coaches are competitive people – they were once athletes themselves. They get pumped up about winning. But it’s not about how many games you win or how many championships. That’s not who we are. Our mission, our philosophy, is consistent. It’s about our students.”

That is not to suggest that Spartano’s teams haven’t won.

He followed Axtell’s footsteps into college coaching, joining UC in 1973 as head baseball coach and assistant men’s basketball coach, later serving as head coach for both teams. He had a winning record coaching on both the hardwood and the diamond. Most noteworthy, his baseball teams had only two sub-.500 seasons in his 17 seasons on the bench, capturing three ECAC Upstate championships during that span. (Coincidentally, Spar-

It's not about how many games you win or how many championships. That's not who we are. Our mission, our philosophy, is consistent. It's about our students.

tano's teams defeated Axtell's Oneonta squad in each of the head-to-heads between protégé and mentor.)

"To have an opportunity to coach in the early 70s, and to have some good teams, I had to mature and learn that it wasn't about me, that these guys could really play," he says.

Since Spartano left the bench in 1989 to focus exclusively on his duties as athletic director, the College's teams and athletes have continued to achieve success. This fall, the field hockey team captured the Empire 8 Conference title, one of several conference championships UC teams have won. Some of those teams, including, most recently, field hockey and men's and women's basketball, have earned NCAA tournament berths. The men's and women's hockey teams have been regularly ranked in the top 25 in the national coaches' polls over the past decade. In addition, 10 UC athletes have received All-American recognition during Spartano's tenure as athletic director.

A TRULY UNDEFEATED YEAR

However, when pressed to name his most memorable team, Spartano recalls with particular fondness the Pioneers 1993-1994 women's basketball team – a team that failed to win a single game in his only year as head women's basketball coach.

"This team," Spartano says, turning around in his office chair and pointing to a black and white team photo of the team that still hangs on the wall behind his desk, "we were tight."

The aging photo elicits memories that seem to Spartano like yesterday. So does the carved wooden sign that reads, simply, "Coach," an end-of-season gift from that '93-94 squad that still sits centered on his desk some 18 years later.

Spartano inherited the coaching responsibilities for the team under difficult circumstances. The previous coach had neglected recruiting, leaving the team with only two returning players on the roster, unable to field a team and facing the likelihood of having to forfeit the season. "I told (then President) Mike Simpson, 'This is going to be embarrassing. We're not going to have a team,'" Spartano remembers.

After discussing the situation with Simpson and with no other option, Spartano appointed himself interim head coach. He began scouring the campus for players, posting "open tryouts" fliers in every building, and soon assembled a team.

What the team of mostly 'walk-ons' lacked in basketball ability and experience, it made up for in character. "We weren't real good," he says before recomposing his thoughts, "(but) it's the best year I had in coaching – no question about it. It couldn't have been any better if we had won all of our games."

For Spartano, memories from that season abound every year in the form of holiday cards, wedding invitations, birth announcements, and personal notes describing personal or professional accomplishments.

"It bothers me when college coaches and athletes lose sight of what's important," he says. "It's not where you are at the end. It's how far you come, and the experience you have along the way. If I learned that from anybody, it was from those girls. Any coach who really gets it will tell you that's true – it's about the experience."

It is one among many beliefs he has passed on to the corps of coaches he has mentored – lessons that now define his legacy.

"He's just been such a great mentor, especially in my first head coaching job," says Claire McLain, UC's head women's soccer coach, one of several coaches who got their coaching starts under Spartano. "One thing he's taught me is the bigger picture – making sure that it's a positive experience for students. I think sometimes as a young coach you get caught up in the little things. He was always the one who would tell me, 'You've got to let that one go, Claire.'"

"All of the coaches here are so invested in our players, and as they graduate and move on, we find ourselves going to weddings, baby showers, and things like that. I know that happens in other places, but I don't think it's everywhere, and I know it isn't to the extent that it is here. Our coaches and student-athletes have truly bought into the family atmosphere, and that doesn't just happen – that is totally Jim."

MAKING IT HAPPEN

On any given day for the better part of three decades, Spartano's office phone rang constantly. Likewise, the flow of traffic through his door has been endless. Often, it's a coach needing additional resources or a staff member informing him of a broken piece of equipment in the fitness center. Or, it may be a parent questioning her/his child's playing time, a faculty member calling about a student's academic performance, or any number of other matters.

Spartano has embraced what colleagues have described as the day-to-day grind of the position.

"An A.D. whom I've known and worked with for many years called me the other day to congratulate me (on my retirement). He said, 'I bet you're excited about stepping out of those shoes. (As A.D.) you're always dealing with somebody else's problems.' And I said, 'They're not problems. It's great that they have the confidence to come in and talk to me,'" he says.

He points to an example from only the previous day.

"Our softball coach came in here yesterday," Spartano explains. "Poor guy was going crazy. They had lost two uniforms. He said, 'I don't know how (it happened), but some how we lost two.' I said, 'Pat, why are you going nuts here? These things happen. Go get two new uniforms. Get what you've got to have.' It wasn't a lot of money, and it's reasonable. We have to make those things happen. I need to take the little things off of their shoulders so that they can focus on the bigger picture, which is providing a positive experience for our students."

While at times, Spartano has placed himself squarely in the crossfire in order to support students, more often than not, doing so has required little to no deliberation, whether the decision involved keeping the gym open past midnight to accommodate a student organization or opening the fitness center before sunrise to accommodate those seeking an early morning workout opportunity.

"If our students want to play basketball at midnight, what's wrong with that? If they're up at midnight, why would we point to a sign on a door that says (the building) closes at 11? What's wrong with midnight? Who are we to say we have to cut it off at 10 or 11? I think it's great that they want to be in here at midnight. We'll open the gym, I'll get a supervisor, and we'll make it happen.

"And I don't see anything wrong with someone calling up and saying, 'I've got an 8:30 class, and I'd like to come to work out at 5 or 6 in the morning. Are you open?' I tell them, 'No, but if you want to get in here, we're going to make it happen.' Why do they need to live their lives on our schedule? Those things are easy, and who would argue with you? Who on this campus wouldn't embrace that?"

"IT'S NOT HARD"

Spartano's list of what he will miss following his retirement is long, however, the top spot is without competition. "The students," he says, without hesitation. "Just walking through the halls, going in the fitness center or the cafeteria, being at practice. I'll miss their energy, their smiles, the, 'Hi coach.' Obviously, I've made great friendships, and I'll miss colleagues – staff, faculty, and administration – a lot. But I'll miss the students more than anything else – no question."

His 38 years of service, the profound influence he has left on the people of Utica College, and the deep imprint he has left on the mission and character of the institution are the pieces of a legacy of which anyone would be proud.

Spartano's most valuable parting gift, however, is likely that of priority and perspective. In an era of rampant win-at-all-costs mentality in college athletics, where on-field performance has trumped the values on which college athletics was founded, Spartano has demonstrated that competing with honor and integrity and achieving success is not a "choose one" proposition.

It is a perspective he once lost hold of on a baseball field in Oneonta, only to regain a grasp he never let go. "It's not hard," Spartano says. "Our coaches and students, they get it. They just sometimes need a conversation. They need a reminder – like I did."
